Questions the Nurse is Asked

Nearly 50% of all pregnancies are marred in the early weeks by the distressing and at times enfeebling symptoms of morning sickness. The precise cause is still unknown, although it has been suggested that a lowered blood pressure may be partly responsible. Adherence to the BiSoDoL Morning Sickness Rules* usually results in a considerable amelioration of the condition.

Copies of the* BiSoDoL Morning Sickness Rules, prepared in detailed booklet form for distribution to your patients, will be gladly supplied on request.

EDITOR: MISS M. L. WENGER, S.R.N., S.C.M., DIPLOMA IN NURSING, UNIVERSITY OF LONDON

Director, Nursing Teaching Unit, University of Edinburgh

THE first director of the Nursing Teaching Unit of the University of Edinburgh is to be Miss Elsie Stephenson, at present chief nursing officer, City and County of Newcastle upon Tyne, a member of the Ministry of Health Working Party on the Function and Training of Health Visitors, and a member of the World Health Organization Expert Committee on Nursing Advisory Panel. Nurses will rejoice at this significant first appointment of a nurse as a member of the faculty of a British university, especially as the appointment as advertised was not limited to nurses.

As county nursing officer for Newcastle since 1950, Miss Stephenson has been responsible for the co-ordination of the work of health visitors, district nurses, midwives, nursery nursing staff and home helps; also for the local authority training schemes for all these services. Miss Stephenson is widely known, not only in England and Scotland (where she took part last month in the conference at St.Andrews University), in the United States of America and Canada, but also internationally by her extensive activities and visits to many other countries through her work with the British Red Cross Society and UNRRA.

Miss Stephenson trained at the West Suffolk General Hospital, Bury St. Edmunds, Suffolk, from 1935-38 and subsequently took midwifery, infectious diseases and health visitor training at, respectively, Queen Charlotte's Hospital, London, Ipswich Isolation Hospital and Newcastle upon Tyne Health Department. She had considerable experience in hospital and domiciliary midwifery before taking the health visitor training and was for two years a health visitor with the West Suffolk County Council.

From 1944 to 1946, as senior sister, civilian relief, Joint War Organization, Order of St. John and British Red Cross Society, Miss Stephenson worked in refugee camps in Egypt and North Italy, was acting matron of a sanatorium in Germany, and was seconded to UNRRA as supervisor, public health nursing services, Yugoslavia. She was also a member of the Child Welfare team undertaking a special survey of health, nutrition and welfare services in Berlin.

Awarded a Florence Nightingale Memorial Scholarship in 1946, Miss Stephenson studied in Canada and the United States, spending an academic year at Toronto University, where she took the Advanced Public Health Administration and Nursing Education course. The subjects studied included nursing education, social psychology, public health administration, epidemiology and vital statistics, and she received the Certificate of Advanced Public Health Administration of Toronto University. Her field work included study of the health and nursing services in Boston, New York and Cleveland, and she gained further experience in Canada at Red Cross outposts in Ontario and at the General Hospital, Calgary, Alberta.

During 1948 Miss Stephenson made a lecture visit to Germany (United States zone) under the auspices of the British Red Cross, speaking to hospital and domiciliary nurses in several centres; she visited Singapore and assisted in the organization of Red Cross centres and a survey of child welfare conditions in British North Borneo, Brunei and Sarawak. She was one of the delegates at the Stockholm International Red Cross Conference in September 1948 and at the end of that year was appointed county nursing officer, East Suffolk County Council, a post she held until her appointment to Newcastle upon Tyne.

Among her wider activities for the promotion of public health and public health nursing development, Miss Stephenson has lectured to medical, nursing, health visitor, and social science students and for a number of organizations including the Royal College of Nursing, the Royal College of Midwives and the Women Public Health Officers' Association. She has spoken and presented papers at many conferences, notably on Prevention of Problem Families, The Application of Recent Research to Health Visiting (at the Royal Society of Health Conference at Hastings) and on Practical Problems in Local Authority Services (at the National Association for Mental Health Conference in 1955). She attended the World Health Organization conference on Staff Education and Teamwork, at Vevey in 1953, for public health and hospital personnel. Miss Stephenson, with these wide responsibilities, has not lost contact with the hospital nursing services, having organized for the past five years, with the General Hospital, Newcastle, the introduction of student nurses to the public health services; the scheme has now been extended to include student nurses from the Royal Victoria Infirmary, Flemming Memorial Children's Hospital and Walkergate Infectious Diseases Hospital. She is a member of Gateshead Hospital Management Committee and is a co-opted member of the nursing sub-committee of the Newcastle Hospital Management Committee. Miss Stephenson is a Soroptimist and still finds time for wide personal interests and activities as well as being a member of other committees.

Nurses will join in congratulating Miss Stephenson on being selected to direct the first university nursing teaching unit in Great Britain set up to prepare teachers and administrators at that fine seat of learning, the University of Edinburgh, following upon the pioneer educational work of the Scottish Board of the Royal College of Nursing.

Topical Notes

Bedford College Conference—

The first residential conference arranged jointly by the Association of Hospital Matrons and the Sister Tutor Section of the Royal College of Nursing, opened to a fine start on Monday with spring sunshine on the flowers and lawns of Bedford College and a constructive lead from Miss Alice Murray, Tutor in Charge, New Hall College, Cambridge University, who gave the inaugural address. The theme of the conference was 'Looking Ahead—the Education of the Student Nurse'. Miss Murray emphasized that the same problems were met in education everywhere, but proved that she was herself well-informed of the basic problems in the education of the young people seeking to become the nurses of the future. Her excellent address will be published in full in a later issue. The conference included addresses and group and general discussions; the suggestions and ideas resulting from this conference of 275 members from the two organizing bodies will be examined further by their joint committee.

—Evening Reception

Sir David Eccles, Minister of Education, and Mr. R. H. Turton, Minister of Health, were among the many guests at the reception on Monday evening when Miss D. M. Smith, president, Association of Hospital Matrons, Miss M. Hill, chairman, Sister Tutor Section, Miss S. C. Bovill, president, Royal College of Nursing and Miss L. E. Charlesworth, headmistress, Girls' Public Day School Trust, Sutton High School, who is taking the chair throughout the conference, received the visitors. Other representatives of the Ministry of Health included Miss Pat Hornsby-Smith, M.P., and Dame Enid Russell Smith. Also present were Sir Arthur Howard, Sir Lionel Fox, Dr. Allan McPhee and Mr. P. H. Constable and leading nurses. A pleasant musical interlude was provided by talented musicians from the Middlesex Hospital nursing and medical staff and students. The success of the conference will be measured both by the constructive proposals on nurse education problems and the friendly co-operation achieved.

At the reception: Miss Ottley, Mrs. Woodman, Mr. Turton, Miss Hornsby-Smith, Miss Hill, Sir David Eccles, Miss Charlesworth and Miss D. M. Smith.

Visitor from New Zealand

Miss A. Orbell, deputy director of nursing, Department of Health, Wellington, New Zealand, has been visiting this country following a tour in Canada and the United States on a World Health Organization Fellowship. Miss Orbell attended part of the Ward and Departmental Sisters Conference in Sheffield (reported opposite).

'Teamwork within the Health Service'

A MOST successful conference on Teamwork within the Health Service was held at Sheffield on April 13 and 14, the arrangements for which proved to be a shining example of teamwork and collaboration on the part of the Ward and Departmental Sisters Section within the Sheffield Branch of the Royal College of Nursing, with the help of their medical and nursing colleagues of the United Sheffield Hospitals and the Sheffield Regional Hospital Board.

On Thursday evening the Master and Mistress Cutler, Mr. and Mrs. P. P. Phillips attended a reception at Tapton Court Nurses Home. The guests were received by the president of the Sheffield Branch, Mrs. W. R. Stephenson, and Mrs. A. A. Woodman, M.B.E., chairman of the Council of the Royal College of Nursing, in a brief speech, welcomed the opportunity afforded to members by the conference.

Between 50 and 60 ward and departmental sisters were present throughout the course which opened at the City General Hospital on Friday morning with outstanding lectures on 'The Bronchitis Problem' by Professor C. H. Stuart-Harris, professor of medicine, University of Sheffield, and 'Recent Advances in Cardiac Surgery' by J. T. Chesterman, F.R.C.S., who had just returned from visiting Minneapolis and Denver in the United States where he had observed some of the latest developments in cardiac surgery in that country. Mr. Chesterman's talk will be published in a future issue.

Professor Stuart-Harris explained the research work at present being undertaken by his department into cases of pulmonary heart failure among patients with chronic chest disease. He spoke of the importance of everyone's contribution—doctors and nurses in the wards, scientists in the laboratories, health visitors and occupational health workers collaborating in studies carried out in the factory and home. The picture of modern medical research, he concluded, was not so much that of the unaided work of a pioneer in his laboratory, but rather that of the total contribution of the various specialist members of a team "including people who like to work outside hospital".

A most interesting afternoon was spent visiting the Spinal Injuries Unit at Lodge Moor Hospital and hearing about its work from Dr. A. G. Hardy, M.B.E., physician-in-charge, after which the party was entertained to tea by Miss A. Holder, matron, and members of her staff.

On Saturday the sessions were held at Clarke House, the United Sheffield Hospitals School of Nursing, beginning with an illuminating talk by Mrs. N. Barnett, B.A., lecturer to the Royal College of Nursing, Birmingham, about 'Ourselves and Others' during which it was obvious from the quiet chuckles that greeted a number of her points that her audience were taking a healthy look at themselves with her. As we looked today at the situation in the Near East, in South Africa and in our own country, Mrs. Barnett declared, the great need of our time was for more people trained in human relations, for the remedy of many of our problems lay not in self-assertiveness but in service which "is perfect freedom". The talk on Hospital Administration which followed, given by Mr. S. C. Merivale, M.A., F.H.A., secretary to the Board of Governors, United Bristol Hospitals, and a member of the Nuffield job analysis advisory panel, will be published in a future issue.

After a buffet lunch, the deputy medical officer of health for Sheffield, Dr. P. G. Roads, spoke on 'The Local Authority Services; how these can assist in reducing pressure on hospital beds'. In a discussion that followed the chairman was Miss K. M. Jones, education officer, Royal College of Nursing, Birmingham, with a platform team which included a ward sister, health visitor, occupational health nurse, almoner and a social welfare officer.

Sincere thanks and appreciation were expressed by those attending the conference for these most stimulating lectures and for the delightful hospitality arranged by members of the Sheffield Branch with the generous help of the matrons and other staffs of hospitals in Sheffield.

THE NATIONAL GARDENS SCHEME

Our England is a garden that is full of stately views
Of borders, beds and shrubberies and lawns and avenues

—so sang Kipling, and from now until November (in some cases) we can visit over 1,200 gardens throughout England and Wales and at the same time assist the elderly retired Queen's and other district nurses who have given years of devoted service but who are too old to benefit by the superannuation scheme. Last year £19,090 was taken, an increase of £832 on the previous year's record, and the continued success of the scheme has enabled the Queen's Institute to increase the small annuity which it pays to retired district nurses (out of its share of the takings) from £52 to £65.

Of universal interest of course are the Royal gardens at Sandringham, Frogmore, Barnwell Manor and Coppins and institutions such as King Edward VII Sanatorium at Midhurst, Westfield College, London University, are also showing their gardens.

An illustrated list can be obtained from the National Gardens Scheme, 57, Lower Belgrave Street, London, S.W.1, price 1s. 6d. post free, with relevant information about special historical or botanical features, travel details and refreshment possibilities.

For the list of gardens under Scotland's Gardens Scheme, apply to the General Organizer, 26, Castle Terrace, Edinburgh 1.

Problems of Adjustment

by R. GULLIFORD, B.A., Institute of Education, University of Birmingham.

WE are confident of our ability to recognize the symptoms of poor physical health. Are we so sure of being able to recognize the symptoms of mental ill-health and, what is more important, of recognizing them before the problem becomes really serious? In general, any behaviour which is difficult to deal with or which interferes with the smooth running of the community is readily seen as an indication of a psychological problem. But problem children are not only those who are conventionally thought of as problem children—the awkward, the aggressive, the persistent enuretics, the bullies, the delinquents. Poor adjustment is often signalized by behaviour which does not specially draw attention to itself.

Difficulties in Development

John, aged 10, was the type of boy who is continually the subject of complaints in the staffroom. He had yet to learn to read adequately and as a result was handicapped in many branches of school work. Failing to obtain approval and satisfaction in school, he sought to obtain the limelight in other ways. And he frequently got it by one of the few ways to open to him—by being a nuisance. He was the form clown; he was continually in trouble and disgrace. Punishments did not deter him from his escapades. His form master could be forgiven for counting him as one of his problem children.

Terence on the other hand was almost a model child. He sat in his place peacefully. He was never in trouble. And if his work was not very good, it was at least very neat and tidy. He was extremely polite. He went out of his way to be helpful and was often to be seen staying behind to help his teacher when the others had gone out to play.

From the point of view of mental health, John was probably in a more satisfactory position. Admittedly, he was doing badly in school and something needed to be done about that. But he had a good capacity for making friendships with other children; he was independent and full of initiative. When he was given some special remedial teaching his energy and drive were easily harnessed to the task of learning through dramatic work and other activities which gave him the legitimate means of being in the limelight. Terence however had started to react to his difficulties by seeking refuge in day dreams, which accounted for his passive behaviour in form. At heart he was rather frightened of the hurly-burly of contact with other boys, which accounted for his preference for staying behind doing jobs in the form room. His early experiences had shown him that neatness, tidiness, politeness are easy routes to adult approval. Unless someone draws him out and encourages a more boyish participation in life, he will continue to withdraw and may become at the least a rather colourless, ineffective person.

Difficulties in development, then, are not only indicated by awkward behaviour nor is behaviour which finds a ready acceptance by adults necessarily satisfactory. (There is something to be said for the attitude of the father who condoned his son's misdemeanours with the remark, "I like a boy of spirit".) We need to be aware of the slighter, less sensational indications that a child's development and adjustment are not quite as satisfactory as they should be. For example, Robert attracted little notice in school apart from the fact that he could never be persuaded to join in dramatic or group activities. His spelling was shaky; his English was otherwise correct but limited and unimaginative. He didn't attract attention in form—often he was absorbed in a book or comic underneath the desk. Outside the form room he was a solitary child. If he was attracted by other boys' games, he was seldom drawn in. These were not startling or annoying symptoms yet they were the only signs in school that at home he was a troublesome and difficult boy, partly owing to a critical and domineering mother. A similar type of problem was presented by Donald, aged 11. He was a likeable boy but he had no real interests and no firm friends. School work was generally below what could be expected of him. He was periodically enuretic. The main impression was of an immature, babyish boy who would need to toughen up if he were to take going to boarding school in his stride. He had been spoilt and over-mothered, and, in addition, several serious illnesses of his mother's had left him insecure, timid and diffident. His father adopted stern methods, believed he knew how to make a man of the boy and if anything made matters worse. Donald's was not an unusual or particularly serious case, but he clearly needed more sympathetic and understanding care than the average boy of his age.

Andrew was an insecure, anxious boy. His anxiety showed itself partly in his constant, inconsequential chatter, partly in nervousness and awkwardness when he was confronted with any task or commission. He was always a little on edge; physical and emotional tenseness marred all his efforts. Several apparently unavoidable separations from mother in the early years, coupled with a lack of real warmth of affection, were among the causes of his insecurity. Also in the picture was a competent and successful elder brother who set Andrew a high standard to live up to.

Prevention Better than Cure

With children like these, prevention is better than cure, or, if you like, a 'stitch in time saves nine'. In other words, if we can do something to make them happier and more settled before the vicious circle of failure and yet more failure gets established, we may save them from becoming more seriously unsettled—as in the case of Henry who first drew attention to himself by a delinquency at the age of 15. The danger signals however could have been noticed several years before. His father was keen on sport and was interested in mechanical things. Henry was a disappointment to father because owing to poor physique he was not good at games. Nor did mechanical matters interest him. His interests were on the artistic side. Father was meticulous, methodical and liked a job well done. Henry was careless and his efforts to do things were always received too critically, without allowance for the age of the performer. Henry's reaction was increasingly to withdraw into his shell and to spend hours seeking refuge in something he could do well and liked—painting and drawing. He acquired no friends and his school work suffered from the inattention resulting from day dreaming. If it had not been for the delinquency which shook his parents like a bolt from the blue no one would have worried over-much about him apart from the termly concern over his school reports. Yet an earlier recognition of his poor adjustment as shown by his seclusiveness, his underfunctioning in school and his limited interests might have prevented his problem from deteriorating to the point of delinquency.

The second of two lectures to nurses holding posts as school matrons, held at the Royal College of Nursing Education Centre, Birmingham.

Recognizing Underlying Reasons

I am not suggesting that you should leap to the conclusion that a child is a psychological case because he is lonely, a daydream, babyish, a bit anxious, lacking confidence, without interests or not doing well as he could in school work. What I do suggest is that you should look a little more closely into the reasons for these things and consider whether the child may need more attention and thought than the average child.

We may well do this, for example, in the case of the child who is continually written off as lazy. Laziness may refer to several things. There is the child who seems lethargic and slow by nature. There is the laziness of the child who is physically below par, who is listless and fatigues easily. We can all recall, too, the child who will not exert himself because he is not interested in the things we think he ought to be interested in—although 'laziness' vanishes when he goes out to the playing fields or when he is engaged in his hobbies. From the psychological point of view we need to recognize the 'lazy' child who has failed so often that he has given up trying. He feels a failure, has begun to accept it and be resigned to it. And there is also the lazy child whose energies are locked up in an inner world of worries or day dreams and has none left over for the real tasks of everyday. The stock remedies of urging, threatening and punishment are usually unsuccessful in the long run. The 'lazy' child who is a failure needs an 'injection' of successful achievement, You may not be able to get at the causes of the worries of the other type of lazy child. But you may alleviate the problem in the way you would with an adult friend who was worried—let him talk about it, or if he cannot do that, ensure that he has occupation and interests that take his mind off it.

As with laziness, so with unsociability we need to look for the underlying reasons for the trait. Normal sociability ranges from the boy who mixes freely and indiscriminately to the one who seeks one close friend with common interests. Outside that normal range is the child who is continually solitary. Is it because he is preoccupied with his own problems? Has he withdrawn into a world of day dreams? Or, more frequently, has he missed social experiences with other children and so not learnt how to get on with others? Is he so immature (or even so much more mature) than his contemporaries that he has little in common with them? Is he rejected by his age group because he is selfish, demanding, bossy, conceited or not liked for some other reason? The answers to questions like these may not only suggest how best to tackle the problem of the unsociable child but may also help to assess its seriousness. Extreme solitariness is often a mark of a poor adjustment or a failure in some aspect of development and achievement.

With the small proportion of pupils who may need 'psychological first aid', as it has been aptly described, the attempt should always be made to look beneath the superficial characteristics and the annoying behaviour to discover the causes. This will amount to a miniature case history including such details as the intelligence, special abilities and interests of the child, his school attainments; his behaviour and attitudes, not only as we notice them, but as they are revealed in school, in leisure time, in his response to different members of staff and to other children. Carrying the inquiry further, any information that can be gleaned about the child's background, his earlier development, his relationship with parents, brothers and sisters will often be found to supply the missing pieces that complete the jigsaw.

To interpret this information one needs psychological insight, which is not something specially miraculous or unusual but a combination of human sympathy, intuition and understanding, with a knowledge of the processes and needs of normal growth through childhood and adolescence. The former, of course, depends on one's own personality and experience, the second can always be increased by reading some of the many excellent accounts available.

Psychological first aid will avoid therefore the mistake of merely tackling the symptom. There is a place for exhortations to 'turn over a new leaf' or 'pull up your socks' and with the normally adjusted child it is often effective. But the child who is unsettled, inadequate or disturbed may be unable to help himself, even though consciously he is anxious to do better and promises to try to do so. As St. Paul said: "The good that I would I do not"; and we all know what happens to New Year resolutions.

Our task whether as teachers, matrons or parents is to try to arrange things so that a step forward becomes more possible of achievement. The lazy, the irresponsible, the selfish, the aggressive, cannot become as we would like them overnight, but by a series of gradual advances. Often we have to be content with small changes. Often too we have to take comfort from the probability that although our efforts at understanding and guidance have not resulted in any very noticeable improvements we may at least have saved matters from becoming worse.

Headaches

The Reason and the Relief.—by Nevil Leyton, M.A.(Cantab.), M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P. (William Heinemann Limited(Medical Books), 99, Great Russell Street, London, W.C.1, 10s. 6d.)

This book is written for the lay public and the most commendable thing about it is that the author writes with obvious sincerity and enthusiasm. Unfortunately this very enthusiasm carries him too far, leading him to make dogmatic statements which are quite unproven; some, indeed, where the weight of evidence is against his beliefs. He has had to face, too, the difficult choice of giving a balanced proportion of space to the various types of headache, or of deliberately suppressing some of the more serious causes to avoid alarming his readers; that, or else he himself has overlooked a few of the less common kinds.

For instance, one line only is given to the headache of brain tumours, and none at all to temporal arteritis.

Headaches of psychogenic origin are alleged to account for only one per cent. of all cases, yet even by the figures quoted there must be many thousands of such sufferers. The reasons for these headaches and their relief are not discussed at all.

In the headache due to high blood pressure, the boiling of urine to discover albumin is described, but no word follows that when a cloud appears it as often as not vanishes with acetic acid, and is not then abnormal. One wonders how many of his readers are going to plague doctors and district nurses with terror in their hearts and test tubes of urine in their hands.

It is, however, on migraine that the author mainly dwells, and here he gives an accurate description, together with orthodox and unorthodox forms of treatment. It would be impossible to agree with all his conclusions, and that migraine may exactly simulate angina of effort is particularly hard to credit. But it is well for medicine that there should be a few voices crying in the wilderness, since right or wrong, they keep complacency at bay.

Let there always be Dr. Nevil Leytons, therefore, but let them not underestimate the therapeutic power of their own enthusiasm, and let them rather write to stimulate their fellow physicians than to bias, yes, and to mislead the lay public. Reading this book will not make a nurse any more efficient in her duties.

Nutrition for Practical Nurses

—by Phyllis S. Howe, B.S. (W. B. Saunders Company, Limited, 7, Grape Street, London, W.C.2, 17s. 6d.)

This manual has been compiled by an American nutritional instructor for teaching elementary nutrition to American practical nurses who are comparable to assistant nurses in this country.

The author has arranged all her material in a simple, straightforward manner; at the end of each chapter she has added a list of glossary terms followed by an exercise. This seems to be a practical way of assisting the pupil unaccustomed to study to retain fresh knowledge of the subject and to become conversant with unfamiliar terms.

The work is arranged in three sections, beginning with elementary nutrition and gradually progressing to diets for sick people and the care and selection of food. The chapter upon the process of digestion and absorption is rather sketchy for such an important subject connected with human nutrition.

Foods common in the dietary of Americans are enumerated and their various functions in human nutrition described in elementary terms. American methods of assessing foood requirements are based on different standards from those used in Europe; it would be necessary for the British student to translate the measurements into those she is familiar with in her domestic work.

Allowing for latitude of American idiom, this manual contains a nutritional course of study easily understood by persons with no previous nutritional knowledge and would be a useful book in the library of a modern secondary school or for the use of pre-nursing students.

Patient Study of Brenda

An Investigation of Haematuria

by JEAN M. HARRINGTON, S.R.N., R.S.C.N.

BRENDA was a sturdy, intelligent and very affectionate little girl with straight, auburn-tinted dark hair and enormous brown eyes. She appeared very pale with dark rings under her eyes but her mother said that she never had much colour in her cheeks. She was almost three.

She was admitted to hospital on January 26, 1955, with a history of intermittent haematuria since December 10, 1954, following an influenzal attack with a 'streaming cold', pyrexia and night sweats. Complete recovery had been made in three or four days but her urine was twice noticed to be brown. Haematuria recurred on December 22 and January 22, persisting for several days, but the child remained well, very happy and energetic. There was no apparent puffiness of her face or limbs though she vomited once. Slight dysuria was associated with each attack. The family doctor had prescribed antibiotics, bed-rest and extra fluids during the febrile periods and finally advised obtaining a second opinion.

Routine examination revealed nothing abnormal. Her birth-weight was 9 lb. 10 oz. present weight 34 lb. 13 oz. All milestones had been normal with no previous illnesses except a mild attack of gastro-enteritis when six months old. Brenda's parents and brothers, aged 11 years and 8 years, were all well with no family history of tuberculosis. The household was extremely happy and united, Brenda being obviously much loved. She adored "her two big boys" as she called Patrick and Desmond. For several days she was very homesick, remaining subdued and detached from ward activities. She appeared angry with her parents, neither playing with or talking to them. She seldom cried and never when they left after visiting her, but soon became accustomed to their frequent visits.

Her temperature, pulse and respiration rates were normal on admission so she was allowed to remain in her own clothes until bed-time and was dressed and allowed up the next day. On being undressed Brenda realized she was not to go home for the night. She screamed and sobbed broken-heartedly, refusing to lie down, but sat up in bed and played with her own toys. During her first night in hospital she slept little and protested loudly if anyone suggested she should lie down or go to sleep. Subsequently she gradually learnt to know and trust us. Although she awoke repeatedly during the night, she would lie down again if told she could remain awake if she wished, but was invariably asleep within 15 minutes. The following clinical examinations were made:

1. Mantoux 1 : 1,000 (negative).
2. Blood sedimentation rate (16 mm. in one hour—normal limit 10 mm. in one hour).
3. Blood urea (32 mg. per cent.—normal 15-40 mg. per cent.).
4. Ward urinalysis (heavy cloud of albumen, trace each of blood and acetone).
5. Catheter specimen of urine:
   (a) Protein 50 mg.;
   (b) White blood cells, 4,000 per cmm. uncentrifuged urine;
   (c) Red blood cells, 30 per cmm. uncentrifuged urine;
   (d) Heavy growth of bacillus coli.
6. Throat swab (heavy growth of streptococci viridans and nasal catarrhalis, light growth of haemolytic streptococci)
7. Straight abdominal X-ray showed 'two linear, metallic foreign bodies, almost certainly in the gut and very probably in the terminal coils of the ileum'.

Left: the X-ray of the abdomen showing the two linear metallic foreign bodies, and above, a sketch showing their size.

The child's mother then recalled an occasion when Brenda was resting and had called out urgently, saying repeatedly "Pins, pins" and pointing to her mouth. Little importance was evidently attached to this incident, there having been no further symptoms, and the actual date was forgotten.

After the X-ray report Brenda was confined to bed and instead of copious fluids, previously ordered to counteract the existing acetonuria, was given small, dry meals and restricted fluids hoping to prevent intestinal trauma. She often cried when given a 'potty' though fully habit-trained. Fluid intake and output were recorded and showed frequency and diminished output. Albuminurea persisted for three days but without further blood or acetone. Brenda remained apyrexial in spite of frequent night sweats. To her great distress she was twice enuretic.

One Foreign Body Passed

Daily straight X-rays were taken. On January 31 and February 1 the lower object appeared to have moved and simultaneously Brenda began to complain of acute but transient lower abdominal pain. Surgical opinion was obtained and, on rectal examination, the lower foreign body could be tipped. A small rectal washout was ordered but was returned with only slight faecal staining. This foreign body was passed the following afternoon, during micturition and apparently painlessly, subsequent micturition being normal. It was 4 cm. long, $\frac{1}{16}$ in. wide and $\frac{1}{32}$ in. thick, with straight ends and a corroded and consequently roughened surface.

The surgeon decided to perform a laparotomy the following day because of the continued immobility of the second object. The parents were notified and their consent to anaesthetic reaffirmed. Sulphamezathine, 0.5 g. four times a day, with potassium citrate, was started at 6 p.m. on February 2.

Pre operative care included extra glucose fluids and blood was taken for grouping and cross-matching.

Laparotomy

On February 3, premedication of Nembutal, gr. $1\frac{1}{4}$, was given at 7.30 a.m. and atropine gr. $\frac{1}{200}$ hypodermically at 8.30 a.m. Laparotomy was performed under general anaesthesia. No sign of the foreign body was found in the gut, nor was there evidence of an old, healed perforation. On exposure the right ureter appeared slightly inflamed and dilated and a thin hard object was felt in the retroperitoneal tissue, parallel and proximal to the ureter and inferior vena cava and below the duodenum. Attempts to display the foreign body failed and the operation was discontinued, the child's condition having become very shocked.

Her general condition improved rapidly after returning to the ward. After regaining consciousness, papaveriti, 4 minims, was given hypodermically to allay restlessness and was repeated during the night to relieve obvious pain and discomfort. Post-operative vomiting did not occur and sulphamezathine was recommenced at 6 p.m. Brenda was cubicle-nursed post-operatively but of necessity was transferred to the other side of the unit. This caused much unhappiness and she often asked to return to her 'other bed', in spite of nursing care being performed by nurses she already knew, but this was harder at night with fewer staff. Fluids and medicines were only accepted reluctantly and enuresis recurred. These incidents we attributed to a further feeling of insecurity and to the possible fact that her 'other' bed held few associations with pain or discomfort.

Temperature, pulse and respiration rates were recorded every four hours. Mild pyrexia subsided by 6 p.m. on February 4. Brenda was blanket-bathed daily and sponged whenever necessary. Pressure areas were treated four-hourly though she moved fairly well in bed. Attention was paid to her hair and mouth but she preferred to clean her teeth independently. She sat in a chair for bed-making from the second post-operative day onwards but always begged to return to bed immediately it was made. Diet was light for two days, then normal; micturition and defaecation were satisfactory.

Except during visiting hours Brenda remained quiet and withdrawn, even her so-called 'favourite nurses' receiving a luke-warm welcome. Her parents brought a large family photograph for her locker and she received many letters and cards from her brothers, other relatives and friends, and these were attached to the foot of her bed. To her immense delight she was transferred to her original bed on February 9 and discovered two boys in the ward of approximately her brothers' ages. She adopted them immediately and for the first time we saw her behaving normally; a cheerful, talkative and fully co-operative little girl.

A Second Operation

A second operation was to be performed on February 11; before this further investigations were undertaken:

1. Catheter specimen of urine-trace of albumen, occasional white blood cell.
2. White blood count, 3,300 per c.mm. Red blood count, 3,530,000 per c.mm. Haemaglobin 71 per cent.
3. Blood was again grouped and cross-matched.
4. Straight X-ray showed no change in the position of the foreign body.

Sulphamezathine was reduced to 0.5 g. twice a day on February 8. Pre-operative care was carried out as before. Premedication of Nembutal, gr. $1\frac{1}{4}$, was given at 8.30 a.m. and atropin gr. $\frac{1}{100}$ hypodermically at 9.30 a.m. The operation was performed under a general anaesthetic, the laparotomy incision sutures were removed and a right loin incision made. The foreign body was located but the ureter had to be incised laterally to free its lower end. The fibrous sheath from which it was extracted contained a quantity of rust. The wound was closed without drainage. During the operation an intravenous infusion of normal saline was begun and later changed to 2.5 per cent. dextrose in half strength Hartmann's solution. This was discontinued at 2.30 p.m., 170 cc. having been absorbed.

Brenda's post-operative general condition was satisfactory but she became restless and fretful on regaining consciousness. Papaveriti, 4 minims, was given hypodermically at 11.40 a.m. and repeated at 10.35 p.m. with good effect.

Recovery

Nursing care was carried out as before but by this time we had gained Brenda's confidence and her recovery was uneventful. Slight pyrexia occurred at 6 p.m. on three successive days but was normal otherwise. The course of sulphamezathine was discontinued on February 14; total 20.5 g. Brenda was eating and drinking well but continued to look pale. Mist. ferri et ammon cit., gr. 5 thrice daily after meals, was started and continued after her discharge home.

Although one big lad had gone home and another been admitted, Brenda appeared equally fond of him but showed no inclination to play with any girls or children of her own age, even though she had many small friends at home. She often sang contentedly to herself or her teddy-bear in a deep monotone and would chuckle spontaneously and hold long conversations with the nurses.

The intravenous sutures were removed on February 16 and those from the loin incision on February 19. Both wounds had healed, no further dressings being required.

Brenda was discharged home on February 20, tremendously excited and very talkative. A new dress had to be shown to the entire staff and other children. I understand she settled well at home with no apparent emotional upsets.

The second foreign body was similar to the first, only 1 cm. longer and both ends were very jagged. Brenda's parents did not recognize them in connection with the toys their children possessed. Various objects were suggested, such as a broken kirby grip, piece of Meccano and axle of a miniature car, but nothing corresponded with their present appearance and the mystery was left unsolved.

HOSPITAL PATIENT COSTS

AVERAGE costs of maintaining hospital patients under the National Health Service during the year ended March 31, 1955, were published by the Ministry of Health at the end of December.* The detailed returns cover some 2,500 hospitals in England and Wales, and it is pointed out that a new classification of hospitals has been adopted; thus, the term 'general' is now replaced by 'acute', and this means that a class-by-class comparison of costs with previous years' figures is not possible.

Three main sets of figures are given: (i) total inclusive net cost per week of maintaining a patient; (ii) the same inclusive of outpatient expenditure (assuming that five outpatient attendances equal one in-patient day); and (iii) the cost further adjusted to include costs of staffed but unoccupied beds.

The average patient-week cost in England and Wales in acute hospitals was £16 9s. A table showing these costs averaged under each of the hospital regions, subdivided according to number of beds (1-50; 51-100; 101-300 and 301-900) shows that in almost every case the larger the number of beds, the greater the cost per patient; in most cases, though not invariably, it is a progressive rise through these four size groups.

Costs per patient in the maternity hospitals were as usual higher than in other categories of hospital, varying from £16 10s. 11d. in the Newcastle Region to £21 19s. 5d. in the North East Metropolitan Region; costs in tuberculosis and chest hospitals ranged from £9 6s. in the Sheffield Region to £13 4s. 6d. in the North West Metropolitan Region. The average cost per patient in the mental hospitals was £4 16s. 9d., the highest figure being that of the Oxford Region at £5 11s. 5d. per patient.

For teaching hospitals (irrespective of size) classified as acute, the average weekly cost per in-patient was £25 6s. in London and £20 over the rest of the country.

The Minister has expressed the hope that hospital authorities will examine the returns with a view to discovering any further economies in any field of expenditure which might be effected and has again asked them to report on the results of their investigations.

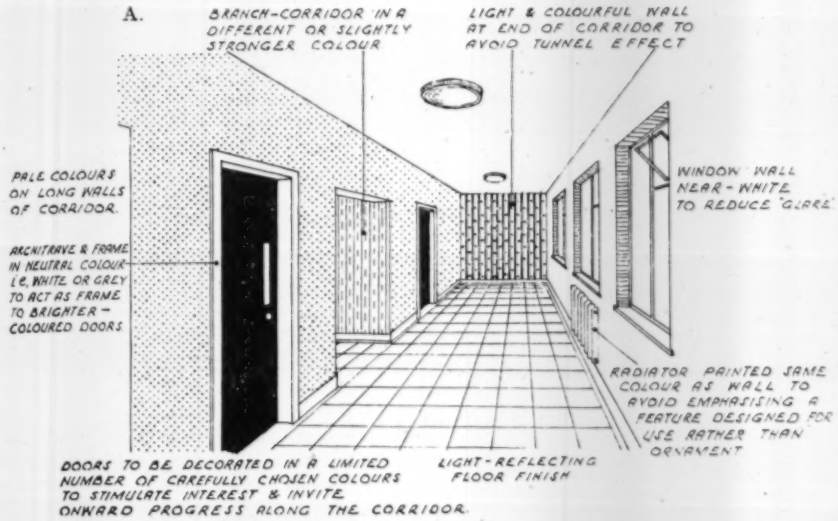
★ ★ ★ Colour in Hospitals

EVERY year between four and five million pounds is spent on the decorating and re-decorating of British hospital buildings; it therefore becomes a matter of plain common sense to see that good value for money is obtained. And just as important as ensuring the use of good durable materials, is the planned use, placing and spacing of colour. *The Use of Colour in Hospitals, published by the Newcastle Regional Hospital Board, shows how careful and informed planning can use colour to augment light or to prevent glare, to enhance an interesting feature or to disguise a less desirable one, to break up large spaces, to reduce the height of over-lofty ceilings, or to give a feeling of space where rooms are small. The author is clearly conscious of the functional needs of hospital buildings, but he shows that with prior consultation with the hospital team, good planning of decoration can be a useful ally in the varied functions of a hospital's departments. Stronger colour, or intensified decorative effect, can be used on the wall surface where there is some feature to which it is wished to call attention—an inquiry desk, for example. In a long and dreary corridor, a series of different coloured doors and any bays painted in a contrasting shade will "stimulate interest and invite progress along the corridor".



The effect of colour on patients in the different departments is discussed. In occupational therapy or physiotherapy departments, a sense of activity and movement can be expressed by strong colour contrasts, but in massage rooms where patients should relax, cool restful colours should be used.

In clinical or treatment rooms, sterilizing rooms, X-ray rooms, ward serveries and ward annexes, where cleanliness is the paramount consideration, only clear, light colours should be used on all surfaces, which should not only be clean, but which should be seen to be clean.

On the vexed question of the best colour for operating theatres, the author has found that there is a conflict of opinion: pale green or eau-de-nil has been generally favoured by surgeons, for it is said that being a complementary colour to blood-red, it prevents a green after-image being seen when the surgeon raises his head from the table; another view has now been advanced—that there is insufficient free blood in most operations to make the after-image a problem, and that, in fact, pale cream or ivory as a background is helpful to the anaesthetist in watching the patient's facial colour. The author therefore suggests that architects, before venturing into this hazardous arena, should first obtain the consensus of opinion among the theatre team in the particular hospital to be equipped printed in the actual colours suggested as decoration schemes. It is interesting to note that among the shades suggested for ceilings are pale green, pale blue, primrose, ivory and cream. Also illustrated is a 'colour circle', giving in diagrammatic form all the colours which directly contrast and those which harmonize. This diagram is followed by notes on the individual colours, their effects on people when used either singly or in combination, and suggestions as to their use according to whether the rooms to be decorated are cold and dark or warm and sunny.

A preface to the book is written by Viscountess Ridley, O.B.E., J.P., a member of the regional hospital board, and daughter of the late Sir Edward Lutyens. Her association with hospitals during many years of public work, and her appreciation of good architectural principles, make her views on the subject of the book of particular value. As Lady Ridley points out, in the past the choice of colour in hospital decoration seemed to be dictated by the desire for 'useful' colours which 'would not show the dirt'—and, says Lady Ridley, 'show' was the operative word. Dull and dreary colours get just as dirty as white paint, and are therefore unhygienic, since the dirt may not be noticed. She welcomes the more scientific and technical approach to the decoration of hospitals, and considers it important that this should be planned by specialists in their own particular field, so that full use can be made of the considerable amount of research that has now been carried out on the effects of colour in its aesthetic and psychological aspects as well as the practical ones of improved lighting and of making the most out of architectural construction governed by considerations of function, or of buildings which may be a legacy from the past.

The Use of Colour in Hospitals can be recommended to any management committee, or board, and nurses who are concerned with planning hospital decoration; they will find in it inspiration and enjoyment as well as practical guidance.

Mental Health Research Fund

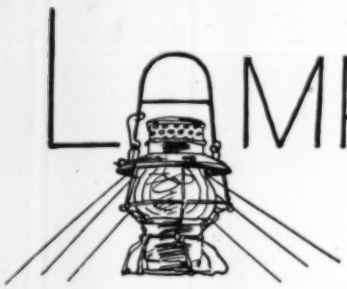
A GRANT to the Mental Health Research Fund of £75,000 spread over six years, by the Ford Foundation, was announced at the annual general meeting of the Fund, held, by kind permission, at the Royal Society of Medicine on March 6. Mr. I. T. Henderson, in the chair, presented the first annual report of the Fund, and reminded his audience of its affiliation to the National Association for Mental Health and spoke of the practical assistance and encouragement received from the parent organization.

Sir Russell Brain, president of the Royal College of Physicians, and an honorary associate of the Fund, gave an address, emphasizing the vital need for further research in this field and the advantage of a voluntary organization carrying out research independently of officially sponsored work which had to compete with the claims of research projects in many other fields. "The prospect in mental health was never so hopeful as it is today", said Sir Russell. "Development in this field proceeds by mathematical progression—the more that is known, the more ways present themselves by which the new knowledge may be applied." Sir Russell also welcomed the breaking down of the barriers which he had observed between the different fields of work and study on the subject of mental health, and he illustrated the value of such co-operation by the work being carried out on drugs which cause hallucinations. There was something to be learned by studying the effects of these drugs on the human volunteers, and the local changes produced in the brain; it might throw valuable light on mental disease in which hallucinations were present.

There was also a great new field of study opening out in genetics in relation to biochemistry, and another most important direction in which research must proceed was in the mental changes associated with the process of ageing. Many mental conditions occurred in old age which were not due to ageing; some were due to a social cause, such as loneliness, malnutrition, lack of interests—causes which were within the control of the community.

A remarkable film, The Growth of Nerve Cells, shown by Dr. A. Hughes, illustrated the behaviour of nerve fibres grown in cultures, seen microscopically, in speeded-up motion. This film was a result of the research work being carried on at Cambridge by Dr. Hughes.

LAMP on the SNOW



Serial version of the book by MARY E. HOPE, published by Angus and Robertson.

THE first home confinement I attended with Dr. Pelinaki was that of Evelyn, the eldest daughter of a worthy matron, Mrs. Hawkins, who easily became the central figure in the drama. She had decreed that Evelyn should return to her mother's protection for the ordeal. Since she had given birth to sixteen infants, she felt that she was an expert on the subject. I was rather puzzled, in fact, as to why she felt the need of Dr. Pelinaki and myself at all. She was a grim character—big-boned, with self-confidence in her every line. She must have been the first woman to say ' Mother knows best '.

Before showing me up to Evelyn's room, Mrs Hawkins gave me a short lecture on how to conduct a labour. It was clear that she was not overwhelmed by my appearance. I was small-boned, she was large-boned. I was young and comparatively inexperienced; she was old and experienced. She had had sixteen babies, and I, alas, could not boast of one! Mrs. Hawkins had lost eight of her sixteen children before they had reached maturity. To her this was an Act of God; to me it was the result of ignorance. I hoped to dispel that ignorance on the part of this generation within my care. The first step was to get Mrs. Hawkins to approve of me. As an ally she would be powerful; as a foe, she would be implacable.

My patient, Evelyn, was upstairs in one of the three bedrooms. She did not appear to be too intelligent but she did seem frightened. Needless to say, the only prenatal care she had had was quantities of legends about pregnancy and labour supplied by her mother.

" Would you mind seeing that there is plenty of hot boiled water and cold boiled water? " I asked. Mrs. Hawkins scurried away importantly, leaving me alone with Evelyn. Seeing that it would be a long time yet before delivery, I urged her to walk around for a little while. She became more cheerful immediately, certain that she must be all right if she did not have to stay in bed.

Downstairs again, I opened up my attack on Mrs. Hawkins. " You have brought Evelyn up to be a fine young woman," I said.

" I'm right glad to hear youse say so," Mrs. Hawkins sniffed. " There's usually not much use the young folks has for us old folks today."

I could see she was pleased for a fleeting second. I returned to the hospital for more supplies and to phone the doctor. I left Mrs. Hawkins with instructions to remove all the clothing that hung on the walls of Evelyn's room and the rest of the conglomeration of junk, explaining that it was necessary as they might harbour bacteria.

" I'm sure I always had the name of being a good housekeeper," said Mrs. Hawkins; she had taken offence.

" I can see you are, Mrs. Hawkins," I said soothingly. " But there can be germs on something that looks shiningly clean unless the germs are killed by boiling or a disinfectant." A sniff was the only acknowledgment I received.

But when I returned to the house, she had done as I had asked and was nearly finished, aided by her youngest child, a curly-headed two-year-old named Jonathan. Just as I entered the room, Jonathan began to cough. He coughed until he was blue in the face and finished up with a perfect ' whoop '.

" Jonathan sounds as if he has whooping cough," I said in horror.

" Yes, he has, nurse. And I'll be awful thankful when he's better. I haven't had a good night's sleep since he got it."

" Has Evelyn had whooping cough? "

" Let me think! I've had that many children it's hard to recollect. Why no, I don't think she has."

I controlled my feelings with an effort and said firmly, " Do you think you could send Jonathan to a neighbour's, Mrs. Hawkins? Someone without children."

Mrs. Hawkins' face became like granite at the suggestion. " Jonathan has never spent a night away from his mother yet, and I don't aim to have someone else look after him when he is sick."

Argument was useless. We finally compromised with a promise from Mrs. Hawkins that she would at least keep the child out of Evelyn's room. But I had by no means given up hope; I expected that even Mrs. Hawkins would bow before Dr. Pelinaki's fire.

No sooner had Jonathan been removed than the household dog galloped gaily on the scene. With a jump he landed on Evelyn's bed, and what a few seconds before had been white sheets was now liberally covered with muddy footprints. With difficulty I persuaded the dog to follow me downstairs.

At this point, Dr. Pelinaki arrived and Jonathan began to cough simultaneously.

" By——! That damn kid has got whooping cough. You'll have to send him to some place else. He can't stay here."

But neither the doctor's mighty oaths nor pleading would move Mrs. Hawkins. She would have been a match for ten Dr. Pelinaki's.

Still breathing fire, Dr. Pelinaki mounted the stairs to examine Evelyn. Labour was progressing slowly.

" All night job," he decreed. " I'll be back around midnight."

As he was putting on his coat, the mongrel dog reappeared, but with a well-placed kick the doctor propelled him down the stairs without ceremony. " Ye gods! " he moaned. " We'll be lucky to get through this case without some infection."

The next hour or so I spent in attending to Evelyn and in showing Mrs. Hawkins how to prepare the necessary sterilized equipment for the baby.

It was now nearly midnight, and Mrs. Hawkins finally consented to putting young Jonathan to bed. She appeared to be softening a little towards me and after

I had sat with Evelyn for a while, she invited me into the boys' bedroom to admire them as they lay asleep.

I was robbed of words at the sight before me. The three big boys and Jonathan (whooping cough and all) were lying curved round a big hole in the centre of the mattress. Each one, except Jonathan, was lying fully dressed except for his shoes.

" Just like a man to see no sense in gettin' into night clothes." Mrs. Hawkins seemed to regard the boys' failure to disrobe as a sign of virility.

Those poor boys ! Now I understood why the teacher at school had told me that the Hawkins boys always seemed tired.

In another room, we peeped in at Annette, a girl who looked about sixteen years of age. She showed some improvement over the boys and was sleeping in her slip. By the light of the lamp she was pale and unattractive.

Dr. Pelinaki came back shortly after midnight. Evelyn was progressing more rapidly now. The contractions of her uterus were coming at about four-minute intervals.

He said, " Might just as well settle down here till it's over." He sat down on a precarious-looking straight-backed chair and rested his feet on the rungs of the bed. Long ago he had learned how to extract the maximum of comfort from the most unpromising situations.

Silence settled down over the household. Silence broken by the small sounds of the night—a cough from the boys' room, a small moan from Evelyn, the sound of Mrs. Hawkins putting more wood into the stove.

At that moment a blood-curdling scream came from Annette's room. Mrs. Hawkins came running up the stairs just as a loud thump indicated that Annette had fallen out of bed.

" She's gone and taken another of them fits of hers. Has 'em regular. I wish youse 'ud have a look at her."

The doctor and I went in. It was not a pleasant sight. Annette lay on the floor, twitching involuntarily, with foamy saliva round her lips.

The doctor promised to send Mrs. Hawkins some pills that might help to control the fits.

" Thanks, Doc. I'll be right thankful for them. Youse go back to Evelyn now. I'm used to handling these here spells. I just wanted youse to see one. Matter of fact, I'm thankful she took one when youse was here."

The next time the doctor examined Evelyn he found that the mouth of the uterus was fully dilated and the time had come for her to help us by pushing with her contractions while I gave her a few whiffs of ether.

" Listen to me, Evelyn," the doctor said. " The next pain you get, you push down and the baby will be born."

I said, " Take long breaths of this—right down to your toes—and it will take the pain away."

But, nourished by her mother's legends, the primal fear of womanhood had her in its grip. She was too frightened to comply with our requests and only yelled when the pain came. But Dr. Pelinaki knew his obstetrics and he knew his people. In language liberally sprinkled with the usual unprintable oaths, he roared at Evelyn to push the baby right out on to the wood-pile at the back door. This was the type of command that Evelyn could understand. Within a few minutes the next generation was announcing his arrival with a lusty howl. Instantly Mrs. Hawkins appeared at the door.

" Ah, it's over," she breathed a sigh of relief. It was only then that the full extent of her anxiety revealed itself behind the mask of self-control and confidence.

Then she ran down the stairs yelling, " Pierre ! You have a son." Evelyn's Pierre was from the French village.

When Evelyn was comfortable again, I went with Dr. Pelinaki to the top of the stairs. " Don't let the old lady scare you," he said. " Don't stick around here too long. You need your sleep."

After the doctor had gone, I went downstairs to get things ready to bathe the baby in the kitchen, where it was warm. Pierre looked at me questioningly.

" You can go upstairs for a few minutes, Pierre."

Mrs. Hawkins set out the things for the bath and I washed my hands before going upstairs for the baby. Pierre came down with me and settled himself with Mrs. Hawkins, one on either side of me, to watch the proceedings. Two pairs of eyes followed my every movement. I began to be nervous. The infant seemed to be more slippery than usual. I felt like a microbe under a microscope. This was infinitely worse than having a supervisor criticize one in training.

Finally Mrs. Hawkins broke the awful silence. " Is the baby all right, nurse ? Heart and everything ? "

" Yes, Mrs. Hawkins. Dr. Pelinaki checked him before he left."

" I'm glad of that. One of my babies had a bad heart when it was born. She was awful blue. She died when she was eighteen months."

" That's too bad. If she had been born today, the doctors might have been able to operate on her heart and fix it. They have learned so much about babies in these last few years."

" Now ain't that wonderful, fixin' a heart that way ? There's no end to what they can do now, is there ? "

" There certainly isn't. They can tell you exactly what to feed the baby on to make it rosy and healthy. The trouble is," I laid it on with a trowel, " the trouble is, not many people have the sense you have, Mrs. Hawkins. They don't know a good thing when they see one."

She beamed at the sledgehammer compliment.

Pierre said, " Father Guillemette tol' me to do like you and the Doc says. I tol' Ev'lin jus' now, ' Ev'lin,' I says, ' We 'ave a son. You do what Miz Hope says and we 'ave the bes' goddam son in the country ! "

An ally. Pierre was a true Frenchman. He was boss in his household, and what he said counted for something.

I kept Evelyn and the baby under close observation for a long time. Mrs. Hawkins, while agreeing with modern medicine in theory, fought it in practice vigorously. It took infinite tact to get Evelyn moved into her own home away from the whooping-cough. Relations were strained when I removed the baby's band.

" He'll get a hernia, you'll see," Mrs. Hawkins observed darkly.

Cold war broke out when we put him outside for a sleep in the warm summer air. Mrs. Hawkins muttered prophecies about pneumonia. " You'll see," she said with pursed lips.

Hot war flared when the baby was given orange juice and cod-liver oil.

" He's too young, I tell you. He shouldn't have nothing but his mother's milk for a year."

Nevertheless, Pierre Jr. continued to thrive. I prayed fervently that no wandering bacteria would infect him. Mrs. Hawkins would blame me and not the germ. Modern medicine was on trial. If Pierre became ill, whatever the cause, the next generation would see no progress.

Fortunately Pierre survived even his immunization against diphtheria, whooping cough and tetanus without blinking an eye. At one year of age he was a firm happy little habitant, and diplomatic relations were resumed with his grandmother who now regarded herself as the founder of modern medicine.

KANTONSSPITAL, ZÜRICH

Nursing Times.

The east wing of the Kantonsspital, with its commanding position overlooking the Rhine.

THE lovely city of Zürich has one of the finest, perhaps the finest and newest of the hospitals of Europe. It is linked with the University and stands above it on a large site high in the city, with fine views across the lower end of the lake, on which Zürich stands to the tree-covered mountains, which here come down steeply to its shores and quays. It was only completed and opened for the reception of patients in July 1951, and is distinguished by the excellent use that has been made of the site, the inventiveness that has utilized the space of the interior of the building to much good advantage and the mechanical aids which have been introduced to make the comfort of the patients and the work of the staff as easy as possible.

The charming entrance hall serves both the new hospital and the polyclinic. It is rather like a hotel lounge—though a little more severe, since its floor is of polished light grey marble from the Italian-speaking part of the country. It is set out with chairs and tables carrying magazines and decorated with climbing plants. At the entrance is a glass-enclosed porter's bureau with two rotating alphabetical indexes. There is also an extensive cloakroom for visitors.

A ramp leads up to a section of the hall which serves as a waiting-room for outpatients, and windows open into the offices which deal with them and distribute the different cases to the different floors of the polyclinic or outpatients department, which was built first, and was opened in 1945.

The Kantonsspital is not new—only the building. It originated in the Hospital of the Holy Spirit, which was later attached to a Dominican Monastery, and only in 1834-45, just over 100 years ago, was the old Kantonsspital built. This has now been pulled down, except for its basement which is used for storage. The site on which it stood has been converted into beautifully laid-out gardens, gay with flowers, with the two blocks of the new hospital looking over them towards the lake, which can be seen from all the patients' bedrooms. These grounds are open to the patients and their friends and there are seats and tables for them under the trees which still grace the hospital gardens.

The new hospital is in two blocks, west and east, in which all the patients' rooms face either south-east or south-west. The west block is shorter but taller, rising to nine storeys. The lower floors contain the administration block and over this are the wards for all the special departments—nose and throat, radiotherapy, neurosurgery, eye cases and the like. This section contains 288 beds for the different specialities. The east block runs along the longest side of the site. It has six storeys, and provides 478 beds for medical and surgical cases; the three top floors are for surgical patients; two floors are for ordinary medical cases and the bottom floor, with direct access to the garden, is used for infectious cases.

The new hospital contains in all 850 beds. In addition there is a separate gynaecological and obstetric hospital building with 450 beds, a dermatological block of 100 beds and a convalescent hospital on the outskirts of the city with a further 200 beds—a total of 1,600 beds to serve not only the citizens of Zürich, but also those from the whole Canton of which it is the centre.

Ward Design Based on Experimental Unit

The new blocks are delightful and embody most of the factors which were incorporated in an experimental ward unit built and used for some time before the hospital plans were finally completed—the architect working in close co-operation with all sections of the staff, including the nurses and the patients, and changing their plans frequently so that the ultimate design would be as free from defects as possible. Each ward unit is made up of 75 beds distributed in rooms of two, three, six or eight beds, in the charge of one head nurse. There is no matron, each head nurse being directly responsible to the director of the hospital and the medical staff for whom she works. The patients' rooms lie on the sunny south side of a central corridor, and the various offices lie on the north.

The little six- and eight-bed ' wardlets ' open off the central corridor by wide doors to permit easy passage of beds and the doors are made noise-proof with rubber padding: the floor is of cork for quietness; immediately inside the doors are small lobbies with dividing walls, largely of glass, and central entrances to the wards. In these lobbies are full-length wardrobe lockers for each patient, each with the bed number, to the left, a ventilated fruit and food cupboard, with shelves for each individual patient, and a desk and chair for the nurse or sister. To the right are two washbasins with mirrors over them, and tiny numbered cupboards hold a tray for each patient's soap and other toilet accessories. Beside each basin there is a flat space to take the patient's toilet tray while he is washing. English people might dislike the lack of privacy in this arrangement, but it is certainly, in many ways a good idea, and time-saving and keeps all the patient's belongings, clothes included, always within his view. There are no curtains as a rule.

The beds are arranged along both sides of the room, or along one only, according to the size. The wall behind the beds is panelled in light wood for wearing purposes, the upper part being water-absorbing plaster, which does not get damp for dust to stick to it.

Devices and Equipment for Patient Care

The greatest part of the south wall is of glass, making the ward very light and airy; these windows are curtained and provided with venetian-type shutters, which are cleverly operated by a stainless steel shaft and mechanism, easily turned by a handle similar to that with which we crank up a car. The shutters shut out sun only, or, on very hot days when the sun is beating on the windows, sun and air. There is mechanical ventilation so that the windows are for light and view rather than for ventilation. There are also balconies on to which the wards open, in order that the patients can get both sun and fresh air as they recover.

The beds themselves are excellent, with frames of stainless steel and boards to keep the mattress from slipping up or down. The turning of a lever raises the head and another raises the foot so that neither back rests nor blocks are needed. The beds are very light to move and a foot pedal raises the two feet at the lower end of the bed off the floor, when the bed is to be moved. Over each bed where necessary is a bell for summoning the nurses, and a hand stirrup hanging from a strong bar, which is fixed firmly to the wall. Beside each bed is a locker which has a stain- and heat-proof, light green top, a drawer for personal belongings, a shelf for bed-pan and urinal if necessary, and another shelf. These drawers are open at the top both back and front for ventilation. Each patient has his own bed-pan and urinal which is emptied and cleansed after use, dried and returned to the special shelf in the locker; it is disinfected after his discharge in readiness for use by the next patient.

Beside each bed are plugs for electrical equipment, radio and lights as required. Small shelves for vases of flowers, also covered with light green stain-proof material, are the only other furnishings in the wards themselves beyond a table, chairs and armchairs, with bright check table cloths and chair covers.

The offices on the north side of the corridor are modern and well-equipped. There is a bureau or duty room for sister and the nurses, well supplied with drug and equipment cupboards, desk and writing-tables, and brightened with flowers and flowering plants. There is a modern kitchen with electric stove for heating drinks and for ward cooking and an electrically heated trolley to bring the patients' main meals from the distributing kitchens. These trolleys are light and easy to manipulate and have open shelves for cold food. They are taken to the door of the patients' rooms, so that the food is kept as hot as possible. Each kitchen has its refrigerator for food stores.

The sluices are very modern and have an interesting type of bed-pan sluice which can also be used for washing urinals or vomit bowls (all sputum containers are burnt). They do not sterilize, but cleanse very efficiently. The bed-pan or other container is clamped to a small metal shelf and the door closed. The clamps are covered with rubber to prevent noise or breakage. A lever is then operated which turns the bed-pan or urinal upside down, emptying it, and jets of water from below and from the side thoroughly wash the receptacle, whatever its shape or size. It is then dried and returned to the bedside locker, or equipment cupboard within the ward unit from which it came. Also in the sluice is a refrigerator for keeping penicillin and a hot bottle heater. These bottles are round metal containers, filled with oil and sealed. They fit exactly into cavities in a steam-heated panel, only the knob, at the end by which they are lifted, projecting. They are said to keep hot for eight hours and are taken from their pigeon-holes and placed in a cover, when required for use, saving the nurses the time required for filling hot water bottles. After use they are returned to the heater to be warmed up again.

Among the offices there are also storerooms for equipment, which includes wheel-type lavatory chairs, maids' duty rooms containing their equipment, and a sluice for emptying buckets, bathrooms, linen rooms and staff accommodation.

The west and east blocks meet at a wide angle of well over 90° to admit light and air freely. They are linked by communicating corridors which give access to such other departments as X-ray, theatre block, medical teaching departments, laboratories, etc.; these are centrally placed in lower blocks at the point of junction. All these departments have excellent and interesting features.

The X-ray unit has 12 departments each with its own equipment, dark rooms and developing, washing and viewing rooms. There are six on each side of a central corridor, one each for gastric cases, thoracic cases, urological work and head cases, and three for fracture cases—which are divided according to the part of the body that is injured.

Each department has a hatch leading to the dark room, and from this, by pulling a handle, the film comes into the last tank, from which it can be lifted into constantly running washing tanks over which are drying racks and viewing facilities. Each department has its waiting-room and dressing cubicles, provided with a locker for handbags or other valuables.

Modern Features of Theatre Block

The theatre block has a central corridor with anaesthetic rooms on one side and the theatre suite on the other. The operating tables are very light and are wheeled into the anaesthetic rooms where the patient is placed in position to prevent disturbance and dust in the actual operating theatres. At the entrance are the surgeons' dressing and shower rooms, with mackintosh aprons and white rubber over-shoes waiting in readiness. There is a central scrubbing-up room with sinks on either side and drums containing sterile nail brushes. Over each sink is an electric timer, such as is used in English kitchens, which can be set to time the process of preparing the hands. A large container of alcohol, operated by a foot pedal and draining into another container (so that the alcohol can be collected, treated and used again) stands on either side.

The theatres are grouped in pairs on either side of this room and have a sterilizing room between them. The walls between are of glass. The windows are double and fitted with mechanically operated shutters. Lighting and equipment is very modern. Sterilization is carried out by steam under pressure in three minutes. The theatres are spacious, with walls and floor of soft-coloured grey marble, which will not cause a tiring glare.

The main entrance for patients has a circular ambulance drive where patients are lifted out under cover; the doors open automatically and are controlled by a ray which when broken by anyone's approach, causes the doors to swing apart. This entrance is at the angle where the two main blocks join, so that it serves them both easily.

The medical teaching department contains two well-equipped steeply banked lecture theatres into the front of which patients' beds can easily be wheeled. There is also a third lecture room with the seats only slightly raised, which can be converted into a chapel; the three walls behind the lecturer's platform and on either side of it disappear into the floor at the pressing of a button, throwing the lecture room and the surrounding corridors into one large space. Walking patients use the classroom seats and bed cases can be brought into the wide corridor space. The atmosphere of a church is enhanced by two large glass windows of charming colour and design in the corridor walls, which those sitting in the lecture room face. The whole is very effective and makes possible the assembling of a large number of people for church services on Sunday with great economy of space.

Food Preparation and Distribution

The kitchen prepares 26,000 meals a day (for there are 850 patients and 550 nursing staff with, in addition, domestic staff). It is placed well back from the hospital with the staff dining-rooms above it. No smell of cooking troubles either the patients or the staff. A long corridor on two floors, one for staff and one for goods, link it with the hospital. A little motor truck with two or more wagons attached quickly brings the food from the main kitchen to the distributing kitchens, where the food trolleys are loaded. The kitchen is light, excellently equipped and uses both steam, for potatoes and other vegetables and puddings, and electricity for frying and roasting.

There are many interesting gadgets and labour-saving devices. Most outstanding are perhaps the stainless steel containers on wheels for daily supplies of dry ingredients such as rice, oatmeal, tapioca; they can be easily pushed to the place where they are needed. There is also a centrifuge for drying lettuces, which are used in large quantities daily, and which some 14 women were sitting preparing for use at the time of my visit. The cooked food is packed into heated metal containers holding 20 portions, which the train quickly takes to the distributing kitchen. A non-fermented apple drink is on tap for thirsty cooks and workers here.

The staff dining-rooms include one for doctors, two for nurses and one for domestic staff. They have long windows facing south with fine views. Very unusual and attractive curtains, boldly patterned in lime-green, orange and yellow, hang at the windows, which are also provided with shutters for very hot weather. There is a cafeteria service, except for the doctors who are waited on. The pleasant dining-rooms have tables for four, and everyone collects her meal on a tray at a service counter quite apart from the dining-rooms to lessen the noise and disturbance during meals. Goods required for the making and preparation of food are delivered direct to the main kitchen so that no noise of milk churns or delivery vans disturbs the patients.

Here then is Europe's newest hospital which cost approximately £8,000,000 to build. It is run by the Canton or State of Zürich, all patients paying according to their means. There are first, second and third class categories. It seems strange to British ears to hear that there is no large nursing school attached to so large a hospital, and no big nurses home. A number of neighbouring houses have been bought for the use of doctors and nurses, who pay for their accommodation from their salary.

Nurses' salaries start at 450 francs a month and rise gradually to 650 francs a month after 10 years (the exchange rate is roughly 12 francs to £1.) The sum deducted for full board and lodging is 250 francs a month, but many nurses take their meals at the hospital, beginning with breakfast at 6.30 a.m., and live out. The nurses, mostly trained nurses, and one in every five a foreigner, work from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., with half an hour for lunch, an hour free after lunch, and a quarter of an hour for coffee and tea at 9.10 a.m. and from 3-4 p.m. each day. They have a day and a half off duty weekly, or can take one day one week and two the next. The mid-morning coffee and the afternoon tea are served from the distributing kitchens at the junction of the west and east blocks in lobbies set out with chairs and tables and used by medical and nursing staffs alike.

There are independent nursing schools attached to smaller hospitals in the town, and student nurses from them come to work in the Kantonsspital during the last six months of their three-year training. They make only a small proportion of the staff. Since the population is German-speaking, most of the foreign nurses come from Germany, as fluent German is essential for any nurse who is a member of the staff.

This description gives but an idea of a most interesting and well-equipped hospital, which cost the Canton government about 11,300,000 francs to run in 1954, in spite of the fact that every patient pays at least 4 francs 50 a day, or is paid for by his local authority. The average cost is 38 francs a day, the average income 14 francs 50 cents per patient. To nurses perhaps the most interesting feature is that patients and nurses were freely consulted both when the plans for the first experimental ward unit were drawn up and while it was in use, so that everything has been done to meet the welfare of the patient and the convenience of the nurse as well as the doctor and administrator as much as possible. Apart from the fact that the beds are closer together than is usual in this country, the hospital appears to provide everything necessary for good treatment and nursing care in pleasant surroundings. On the Continent three feet between beds appears to be the the accepted standard, that is, six feet between bed centres. In Britain eight feet between bed centres, allowing five feet between the beds, is accepted as the minimum space for convenience in treatment and nursing, for lessening the risks of spread of infectious conditions and increasing the patients' sense of privacy. The new hospital is certainly a most attractive building, which provides a large number of beds and yet contrives to produce a homely atmosphere.

A UNIVERSAL OVERHEAD READING TABLE

by K. F. SHRUB, B.SC.(ENG.), A.M.I.MECH.E., A.M.I.E.E.

Above: the patient turns the pages with no fear of tearing them since the bottom edge is backed with a curved rising portion specially constructed to prevent tearing.

SUPINE patients especially need some device to help them read in bed because even holding the arms aloft is very tiring, without the pound or so of the average novel. A film projector is often employed to project on to the ceiling an image of a book previously microfilmed, such projectors and a library of films being available from the British Red Cross. Prismatic and double-mirror spectacles can be used to 'lift' the patient's vision so that he can hold a book on his chest and yet read it while looking upwards. Devices to hold a book directly over the patient's line of view have been constructed in wood both here and in the United States; known types, however, have restricted applicability. One such direct vision device commercially available in this country is adaptable also as a writing-table and general purpose shelf. It is entirely of metal which together with purchase tax raises cost and necessitates industrial manufacture; the book is held by a clip system and the viewing angle is varied by a ball-and-socket and friction pivot system.

The universal overhead reading table described here was constructed in the occupational therapy department at Wembley Hospital. It is a direct vision device which has been designed primarily so that it can be manufactured at minimal cost by handyman skill while providing the patient with the best possible facilities for reading under his own control, and an inherently high degree of safety in adjustment. The methods of adjusting the viewing angle and of turning a page are particularly advantageous. It incorporates a mirror, trinket tray and perspex sheet for viewing letters or playing with toys.

The reading table has four principal components: a bedclamp, vertical post, book and suspension bar assembly, and a book platform. The bedclamp has been designed with one hand-operated screw to fit the headrails of 15 types of hospital bed and cot, and the solid headboards of domestic beds. The two-feet high vertical post, made of 2 in. by 1 in. prepared softwood, is free to rotate in a bearing in the bedclamp and if the bottom of the bed is raised on blocks to tilt the bed up to a maximum of 20 degrees the bedclamp can be altered in angle relative to the headboard so as to maintain the post at the vertical. The boom is adjusted in height up the post by hooking it in position on to steps spaced 2½ in. apart. This means of attachment bestows a high degree of safety since the boom cannot be changed in height unless it is supported by a hand at each end. The boom is made of 1 in. by ¾ in. softwood, and is 3 ft. 3 in. long. It is hooked on to the post by means of five-ply wood cheeks joined by a cross-bolt, this arrangement permitting the angle of the boom to the horizontal to be selected if specially desired.

Left: the back of the bottom shelf is polished and can be brought forward and used as a mirror. Suspended from the shelf is a self-levelling trinket tray useful for cigarettes, cosmetics, shaving kit, etc.

The suspension bar assembly consists of two 18 in. long plywood cross-bars free to rotate and be clamped on a central bolt having a wing-nut on the under side. This bolt is fitted in two halves of an aluminium block free to slide on the boom and is arranged so that when the patient operates the wing-nut he can clamp the two bars and the two halves of the sliding block to the boom in one motion.

Platform for Books and Magazines

The book platform is constructed from 16-gauge aluminium to minimize the number of separate parts and consists principally of a pair of ledges 16 in. wide upon which the book is supported face downwards, one ledge receiving the margin at the bottom of the page and the other that at the top. Almost all books can be supported in this way including folded paper cover magazines and there is then no obstruction to the print at all due to clips or rubber bands. The distance between the ledges is adjustable by means of a cord between them and can be set at any distance up to 12 in., so accommodating most books. The top ledge is pierced with holes to show readily how far the top margin of the book is supported upon it. The bottom ledge is backed with a curved rising portion to prevent pages becoming torn against the bottom ledge during page-turning. This bottom ledge is constructed as one edge of a nine-inch wide shelf, the back of which is polished to form a mirror, and from the top of which the top ledge is supported on arms 10 in. long pivoted from 2 in. high pillars.

The complete book platform is hung from the suspension bars on a single loop of cord strung alternately from over the four ends of the bars to two holes in the top ledge and two holes in the back of the shelf. By this means the tilt of the platform forwards and sideways can be adjusted to any angle about a centre of rotation near the viewing plane by finger-tip action without the aid of friction screws, and the suspension provides ready damping of the platform against high frequency swinging communicated from the bedstead. Suspended from the bottom ledge is a self-levelling trinket tray useful for cigarettes, cosmetics or shaving tackle. A sheet of perspex normally laid against the shelf can also be brought forward against the top ledge like a book when desired. Single sheets of paper like letters or pamphlets can be laid upon this and read through the perspex, and when the platform is tilted to bring the perspex horizontal it can also be used to support toys which can be played with by looking at them from underneath. This perspex or any other hardboard can also be used as a backing board for writing or painting.

To set up the reading table the bedclamp must first be clamped in position by a nurse and the boom adjusted to a suitable height on the post; it is not considered safe to give control of vertical height to the patient. All subsequent adjustments for reading can then be made by the patient. First the block is slid to an appropriate position along the boom and clamped there, then the gap between the ledges is adjusted to suit the book to be read; the viewing is then adjusted. To turn over a page the book is pushed away from the top ledge, the page turned in the usual way and the book returned to the top ledge, the weight of the book being supported throughout the operation by the bottom ledge. To use the back of the shelf as a mirror it is simply rotated into view. To fold up the book platform ready for parking it flat against the wall the suspension bars are rotated in line with the boom, the top ledge brought close to the bottom ledge and the platform shelf tilted to the vertical. The boom is then pushed round on its post flat against the wall.

Adjustable Bedclamp

The design of a bedclamp to fit different types of hospital bed and domestic bed and at the same time be suitable for tipped beds is a complex problem. If the reading table is exclusively for hospital use a simpler solution is a clamp, made of hardwood or metal, which grips the headrail of the bed only with a tight friction grip; with a tipped bed the post can then be adjusted to the vertical by turning the clamp around the rail.

It has been suggested that overhead reading tables for use in general hospitals should be in the charge of the occupational therapy department under the direction of the appropriate registrar, since in a general hospital the registrar knows in which wards the supine patients are, and reading is one of the suitable occupations for such patients.

Wembley Hospital, with 134 beds, is likely to have a maximum number of six supine patients at any one time and it is considered that four overhead reading tables will suffice to meet the demand. One generally similar reading table has been in use at St. Helier Hospital, Carshalton, for the last four years.

[The author wishes to thank the matron of Wembley Hospital, Miss M. R. Dunning, for encouragement and permission to prepare this article.]

STUDENT NURSES' ENTERPRISE

Visit to a Swiss Hospital

by JOAN ELMY, Student Nurse,
The Royal Hospital, Richmond, Surrey.

IN 1954 our Student Nurses' Association Unit raised sufficient funds to allow two of our nurses to visit Belgium. Last year it was decided we would try and go one better. At our annual general meeting it was suggested that Zürich should be our aim. At this time our bank balance was about £5 !

This, you can imagine, meant effort and hard work from all the Association members to raise the necessary funds—approximately £113. However, jumble sales were organized, and a sale of work, and many friends gave generous donations.

The great day came when our bank balance showed a promising sum. A meeting was then called. It was agreed that all the members' names should be put in a hat, and two withdrawn. As this might have caused a little consternation if two friends had not come out of the hat together, two names were bracketted, so making the one draw. This was done. Our president put it to the meeting that as the treasurer had worked very hard for the Association, and as funds allowed, she should make the third member of the party.

That is why three of us were given this most wonderful opportunity to visit the Canton Hospital (Kantonsspital) in Zürich. The arrangements for our visit were made by our president, who contacted the director of nursing at the Canton Hospital. We cannot thank the director and her staff sufficiently for the wonderful hospitality we received. No effort was spared to make our visit enjoyable and interesting.

Most Modern Hospital

The Canton Hospital is reputed to be the most up-to-date and modern hospital in Europe. According to the 'locals', a much smaller Zürich hospital, completed some two years ago, holds that title. We, however, being unused to the latest thing in architecture and equipment, found many points of interest.

The hospital cost the Swiss people one hundred million francs. With its separate department hospitals it houses 1,600 patients and gives employment to 1,900 people—from the director down to the humblest member of the staff.

In designing the buildings, Swiss architects have given of their best: maximum light and sunshine have been achieved in all rooms. In every department technicians have planned well, giving equipment which combines efficiency with beauty of line.

The blocks of buildings are grouped round a fine park, with shady trees and winding paths. The flower beds at the time of our visit were bright with summer flowers. There is a commanding view of Zürich from the flat roofs of the blocks, the highest of which is 10 storeys.

The entrance hall resembles that of a hotel rather than a hospital. (We thought we had entered the wrong building until we were reassured by the traffic of white-coated doctors and people who obviously looked like outpatients.)

A Day's Tour

We went with a guide on a tour lasting the greater part of the day.

We noticed that the ground flooring which had the heaviest traffic, was composed of a marble-like stone, while higher storeys were floored with foot-square cork blocks, which polished well, but were quiet and easy to walk upon. The theatre unit had its own electrically insulated flooring. All lifts had one door only, no inner gate to be closed.

All patients pay according to their incomes and personal wishes. It seemed a very expensive business if one wanted to be a first-class private patient. (Private patients are divided into three classes, according to rate of payment).

Every unit has its own sluice, linen room, room for cleaning equipment—containing hot and cold water—patients' dayroom, and a treatment room, this also contains such stock as lotions and drugs not actually in use.

Another room is kept solely for equipment: each unit has a weighing chair, heat cradle, three chairs (one collapsible), together with the usual conglomeration of bed cradles. It seemed the junior nurses spend little of their time in pursuit of equipment !

Swiss Sluice

The sluice, which is so familiar to us all, was unrecognizable in its Swiss setting. There were no racks of bedpans—these are kept in the bedside lockers of the patients. There were no glazed sluices requiring the perpetual application of scouring powder; instead, a large chromed washing cabinet, fitted with clamps to hold any sized article requiring washing. When these clamps are fixed, the sliding door of the cabinet is shut, the article is everted and washed by jets of hot water. This automatically stops when the door is again opened. No fear of finding a flood at two in the morning through a weakened catch !

The ward kitchen contains the usual equipment. All cupboards have glass sliding fronts, allowing staff to see the articles required without grovelling among innumerable dishes.

The wards were, of course, full of interest to us. The furniture and woodwork are light in colour. The bed frames incorporate light wood and chromed steel. Every bed has a pulley to encourage the patient to move by his own efforts. All bed frames have a bar each side for attachment of drainage bottles or transfusion stands.

Unlike English hospitals, where the patient's home is where his locker is, the Canton patient has many cupboards. The bedside locker contains just everyday items, such as spectacles or clean hankies. Every patient has a long cupboard for clothing, an aerated food locker, a small shelf for washing equipment and a medicine tray, with an individual glass for each patient. All cupboards are not near the beds, but in that part of the ward separated by glass walls to form the ward 'office'—this contains writing-desk, chairs, drug cupboards.

Rectal suppositories are the current favourite method for the administration of drugs, and we saw many familiar preparations set up in this manner.

The Nurse Will Know

Our inquiry regarding report books was received with amusement. A small exercise book was produced which merely stated patients' names, drugs given, and any to be given during the night. The guiding principle appears to be that a nurse sufficiently interested and trained will know what attention her patients require, without being told in monosyllables.

Trained staff have considerable responsibility with regard to patients' treatment. All intravenous fluid is administered by them, all blood specimens taken. Being schooled in the hazards of such procedures, I found the prospect disconcerting. However, mishaps are apparently so rare as to be almost non-existent.

The glass drip connections are much larger than those used in England, and can be seen from a greater distance. A glass fitment at the side allows drugs to be inserted—this avoids puncturing the rubber tubing.

Ward lighting is arranged by main lights and individual bed lights. These are freely movable, can be fixed in any position and have a switch to adjust depth of light—bright or shaded—for night use.

In many wards the windows reached almost to the floor, to enable bed-bound patients to see the gardens. All rooms are planned to face the gardens, except for a small minority used solely for very ill patients. Many wards have a balcony.

Patients are allowed to receive visitors either on the balconies, in the garden, dayroom or ward. Visiting times are less frequent than at home. A rebellion would soon break out among patients at home if only two visiting days weekly were offered! The shopping needs of patients are met by the hospital shop and post office.

Food, which plays a vital part in any hospital treatment, is amply catered for, with a huge main kitchen and special diet kitchens. As nearly four thousand meals are served to patients twice daily: the extent of the kitchens and number of staff employed can be imagined. During our visit, we noticed hundreds of individual savoury pies being made for lunch. This hospital has set out to remove any institutional atmosphere, which could so easily develop because of its size. I think they have succeeded, and part of the kitchen's effort is to avoid mass-production of huge communal dishes.

Every modern convenience is installed to facilitate smooth working. The kitchens are very light and air exchange maintains cool conditions.

Staff Dining-rooms

The nursing staff have their own large dining-room, with help-yourself service. The tables are set for four, and unlike English hospitals, there is no 'seats according to seniority'. The height of levelling was reached when we students lunched with the matron! However, it appears far more natural and, I think, much better, for groups to gravitate to their own particular sets. Few people could chat over the morning's mishaps with someone two or three places up in the hierarchy!

The medical staff eat in a similarly designed dining-room. They, being more conservative, prefer permanent seating positions and arranged in long rows. Like true medicos the world over, they are waited upon, and do not help themselves!

After reviving ourselves with a well-cooked (though strange-tasting) meal, we continued our visit.

Observation Panels

We saw more wards and equipment. Children's wards, we noticed, had dolls hanging down from the pulleys over the bed. Rooms used for children (and those used for observing psychiatric patients) have a large glass panel in the door through which to view the patient. From the inside of the room, however, this appears to be a mirror, so the observer is truly unobserved!

The theatre department comprises two operating rooms with one table, and two with two—making it possible to take six cases simultaneously, if needed. (The casualty department has its own two theatres.) Each theatre has a sterilizing room and an anaesthetic room. A scrubbing-up room is shared between two theatres. One refinement noticed here was a timing alarm clock over each sink—not Swiss made, but specially imported from England!

Humidity and temperature are carefully controlled throughout the units—the preparation rooms are warmer than the theatre.

We were shown the X-ray department, cobalt bomb unit and radioactive isotope laboratories. Harwell provides all the radioactive material used at present, but a pile is planned for the Zürich area in the near future.

Physiotherapy Department

The physiotherapy department contains every imaginable type of apparatus from gymnastic equipment to herbal bath units. One feature here, to help keep the hospital self-contained, was the production (by a system quite beyond our ken, though explained carefully in German by the operator!) of carbon dioxide for the CO_2 baths.

We visited the outpatient departments, medical and surgical, each in its appropriate block. Each consultant has his own consulting-room and office—also a secretary, complete with an office.

The waiting-hall has attractive chairs and tables—grouped, not in straight rows. Even the magazines did not appear ancient! The walls are brightened, as throughout the corridors and waiting-rooms of the hospital, by modern paintings.

Swiss Nurses

What of the people who work in this planner's paradise? The nursing staff begin training at the age of 21, for three years, and only Swiss girls are accepted. One head nurse, who had herself trained in England, said that the Swiss training was more practical but less theoretical than the English. She had found students giving drugs, and yet quite unaware of the effect they would produce. (This, perhaps, only shows one student's lack of knowledge!)

Among the nurses working we felt a real sense of comradeship—each seemed to be content, truly satisfied that the work she was doing was valuable to her fellow-man. One realized the great extent of the nursing profession throughout the world, in watching them ministering to their patients.

Medical Students

Medical students are accepted from all over the world, and have beautiful lecture rooms at their disposal. There would be no excuse for those who sat in the back rows here, for the ceiling is constructed so that sounds are as clear there as in the front rows. The front of the lecture rooms have stronger lighting than that over the seats. Even the blackboards lack the glare and shine so often apparent at home!

We toured on—watching, learning; wondering that such a collection of skilled designers had brought this beautiful plan to a working reality. It would be impossible to tell of all we saw, or of all the impressions these new sights made upon us. Perhaps, however, in reading this, you will have gained—as we did—some insight into another hospital's acceptance of the challenge of sick humanity.

Ward Sisters Refresher Course

Above: Miss D. R. Waller, matron, chats over a cup of tea with the afternoon speakers, Mrs. E. Sidney and Mr. J. Smiley.

A HIGHLY successful one-day refresher course for ward sisters was held in January at the Central Middlesex Hospital and was attended by some 100 sisters, including 35 from 19 other hospitals in the North East Metropolitan Hospital Board Region.

In the morning the film Continuous Observation was shown and an introductory talk was given by Dr. O. W. S. Fitzgerald, medical director, Shenley Hospital, Herts. This was followed by a lecture on the geriatric services by Dr. Abdullah, which embraced a description of all the social services available to assist elderly people short of their admission to the chronic sick ward of a hospital or institution. An interesting talk on his American visit was given by Dr. F. Avery Jones.

After the visitors had been entertained to lunch in the nurses home, a most interesting and informative talk on Human Relations was given by Mrs. E. Sidney, B.A., lecturer in this subject to the Staff College for Matrons, King Edward's Fund, and the Battersea Polytechnic (also to the Royal College of Nursing and the ward sisters course of King Edward's Fund). In any group of workers, she said, the main needs were for its members to feel that what they did was of value; that the group's work was valued in the organization as a whole, and that they should be able to realize where their particular branch of work fitted into the work of the entire organization. Using actual case histories as proof, Mrs. Sidney showed that good conditions of work, pay and leave, were no substitutes for the intangibles provided in the small group, democratically led—but it must be led or there would be no feeling of security.

After a break for tea, Mr. J. Smiley, of the Ministry of Health, gave an instructive talk on the National Health Service Superannuation Scheme, and afterwards answered questions.

Miss D. R. Waller, matron of the Central Middlesex Hospital, acted as chairman throughout, and as hostess to the visitors, who afterwards had the opportunity of seeing any ward or department of the hospital in which they had expressed individual interest, before returning to the nurses home for a sherry party. Here they met the consultant staff, the group secretary, the hospital secretary, the chairman of the group and representatives of the management committees of the group, as well as senior nursing staff of the hospital.

HERE and THERE

NURSES' FLATS DISCUSSED, FIFE

THE possibility of providing flats for nurses employed in local hospitals has been raised at Kirkcaldy in Fife where the Victoria Hospital is being extended. A new nurses home will accommodate about 88 but these will be mainly first- and second-year student nurses with a nucleus of senior staff. A number of the nurses could make their own arrangements but about 30 or 40 will require outside accommodation. The regional hospital board has asked the Kirkcaldy Town Council to co-operate by providing housing.

It has been suggested that the local authority might provide the flats or hostels, and the Board consider furnishing the flats. The nurses would then pay a rent which would need to be an economic rent in terms of local housing.

GOLD COAST—WHO MEMBERSHIP

APPLICATION has been made by the United Kingdom Government on behalf of the Gold Coast for admission as an associate member of the World Health Organization (WHO). The application will be submitted to the Ninth World Health Assembly, opening in Geneva on May 8. The Assembly will also examine the application made recently on behalf of Nigeria by the same Government. Membership in the World Health Organization is open to all states. Territories which are not responsible for the conduct of their international relations may be admitted as associate members by the World Health Assembly, which determines the nature and extent of their rights and obligations.

TRAVELLING NURSING EXHIBITION

THE Minister of Labour has inspected the travelling nursing exhibition van before it set out to tour the country. The van contains a most attractively displayed exhibition, and panels with enlarged photographs illustrating different aspects of nursing can be hung on the outside of the van to attract visitors. The centre space is occupied by a model of a modern hospital, every department depicted in miniature, and adjoining it a block for the nurses home, dolls' house size but complete in every detail. The model lights up from inside for demonstration purposes and should prove most attractive. There is a small interviewing cubicle where those interested in nursing as a career can obtain information from the officer of the Ministry of Labour and National Service in charge of the exhibition.

'FOOD WITHOUT FEAR'

SIR Cecil Wakeley, Bt., gave a short introductory address at the preview of a film for hospital catering staffs, Food Without Fear. The film, which is in colour, shows graphically the dangers of food contamination, and of food poisoning in particular, demonstrating how they can be avoided by hygienic procedures in shops, kitchens, or in any place where food is served to the public. The commentary points out that although more attention is being paid to clean food handling, cases of food poisoning unfortunately continue to increase. "During the year" (1954), it says, "the total number of incidents was 6,016, made up of 4,880 sporadic cases and 1,136 outbreaks, 630 of which were confined to members of single families. The number of incidents was 14 per cent. more than in 1953." The film has been made by Deosan Ltd., and they are concerned to demonstrate food hygiene promoted by means of their various chemical sterilizer preparations for washing up and for cleaning equipment. It is pointed out that detergents alone do not kill germs, but it is demonstrated that a suitable chemical sterilizer can be mixed with the day's supply of liquid detergent. A panel of bacteriologists and sanitary authorities answered questions in a 'brains trust' following the showing of the film. Among points raised was that of sterilization by steam, and this was said to be effective provided the correct procedures were carried out; but there was the risk that pressure or temperature might be inadequate.

NATIONAL SOCIETY OF CHILDREN'S NURSERIES

THE National Society of Children's Nurseries celebrates its 50th anniversary with a jubilee conference to be held in London at County Hall, Westminster, on May 30, 31 and June 1. The conference will cover all aspects of child care. Among those reading papers will be Professor Fraser Brockington, professor of Social and Preventive Medicine, Manchester University, Dr. Kenneth Soddy, Department of Psychological Medicine, University College Hospital, and Professor W. S. M. Craig, professor of Paediatrics and Child Health, University of Leeds.

Organizations who wish to send a delegate and individuals who would like to attend the conference should write to the Secretary at 45, Russell Square, London, W.C.1.

CENTRAL MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL VEGETABLE ROOM

THE Central Middlesex Hospital has set a precedent in the building of the central vegetable preparation room to supply the four kitchens of the hospital. The new unit was formally opened on March 2 by Mr. Maurice Orbach, M.P., chairman of the hospital management committee.

The building is equidistant from the four kitchens and cost £2,374, including the demolition of the original building. The interior is bright and spacious with the floor and lower half of the walls cream tiled; the rest of the walls and ceiling are painted yellow contrasting with the red-painted window-frames. There is strip lighting, and a thermostatically controlled electric convector-type heater.

The bulk supplies of vegetables are brought in at the western end of the building to the two bays for root and other vegetables. In the preparation room itself, the sinks and tables have been carefully positioned to enable a swift and continuous flow of preparation and filling into the covered carriers which are despatched from the eastern end. There is also a small yard for refuse collection, and adjoining toilet accommodation.

The project was designed to promote hygienic food preparation, to economize in labour, to eliminate, as far as possible, unnecessary handling of bulk vegetables and to improve the environment of the workers. Certainly the kitchen staff who were present at the opening seemed very pleased with their new unit.

TRAINING HOSPITAL DOMESTIC STAFF

KING Edward's Hospital Fund for London is continuing to arrange short refresher courses for those responsible for the recruitment, training, management and welfare of domestic staff in hospitals, as recommended in a report prepared in 1946 at the request of the Ministry of Labour and National Service. There has been an appreciative response on the part of the hospitals to this opportunity and the large numbers of applications received for these courses give clear evidence of the importance now attached to the right training of hospital domestic staff.

An informal 'at home' was held on March 21 at the School of Hospital Catering, St. Pancras Way, London, when a group of senior members of hospital staffs in the London area who had been seconded for a week's refresher course at the School of Catering entertained a number of visitors to tea, among whom were the matrons of their own hospitals with other administrative officers and lecturers to the course. About three months after each course a follow-up conference is arranged to discuss the progress made and difficulties not yet resolved.

At the Cinema

The Court Jester

Here again with all his charm and gaiety is Danny Kaye, as court jester to the king of England (exact period unspecified). It is all quite absurd and very good entertainment. Starring also Glynis Johns, Basil Rathbone and Cecil Parker.

The Man who Never Was

A very excellent film of Naval Intelligence and the plan conceived to delude the enemy as to where the Allies were going to invade Europe. It is a real thriller, superbly acted.

Good Moruing Miss Dove

An elderly school teacher inculcates discipline in the children in her charge. This virtue she has to use herself when she is suddenly stricken and taken to hospital for an operation. Jennifer Jones is Miss Dove, and she acts supremely well.

At the Theatre

CRANKS (St. Martin's)

You need to be quick of eye, mind and wit to appreciate everything in this sophisticated revue, so amusingly and cleverly presented by Hugh Bryant, Annie Ross, Anthony Newley and Gilbert Vernon. They sing, they dance, they mime, they talk at a terrific rate; they seem to use every muscle and bone, they move props and change items of costume—all against a surrealist setting which is perfect for such titles as Bats, Paranoia, All Tied up, Passacaglia. It does not really matter that one does not know the titles till the curtain goes up, for much is literal, more is Goon-like, it all coheres in an odd kind of way and makes a fascinating evening.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA (Old Vic)

This most entertaining, at times hilarious production, makes sense of a play which is not easily understood from reading the text. The programme tactfully reminds us that it is the seventh year of the siege of Troy by the Greeks to avenge the theft of Helen, wife of Menelaus, by Paris, son of the Trojan king Priam, and Troilus (John Neville) is lovesick for the charming if wanton Cressida (Rosemary Harris).

Tyrone Guthrie has imaginatively experimented with the costumes and where one might expect authentic Grecian and Trojan uniforms, one sees instead shades of Prussian generals, Life Guards and Kitcheners. They are all fed up with the war; the Trojans are even debating whether to send Helen packing; the Greek generals are at odds. They are all so human—the delightfully Edwardian Pandarus (Paul Rogers), Gaiety-girl Helen (Wendy Hiller), the bombastic Ajax, the old bore Nestor, Achilles, great in renown but not in truce, dyspeptic Menelaus, the Drake-like Ulysses—and above them all shines the integrity and valour of Hector (Jack Gwillim).

And if there is frequent cause for laughter there is always Thersites (Clifford Williams), a kind of Strube's little man, to press home in forceful language the folly of war, the truth about heroes and wantons. A moving little soliloquy by Pandarus ends a play in which the poetry may at times be subordinated to humour—but what fun it all is.

THE GOOD SAILOR (Lyric, Hammersmith)

A dramatization by Louis O. Coxe and Robert Chapman of Herman Melville's novel, Billy Budd, this is a tale of the bad old days, with all the horrors and hardships of life in the King's Navy—depicted in no mealy-mouthed fashion by an effective cast. Ruffians, almost all, their lives aboard H.M.S. Indomitable are dominated by fear of the Master-at-Arms, Claggart, played by Leo McKern who succeeds admirably in giving an impression of smooth, satanic cruelty to this unpleasant character. In contrast to the varied villainy of the rest of the crew, the hero, Billy Budd (Philip Bond), is a simple, good-hearted orphan boy, who, by stabbing Claggart to death under the greatest provocation, provides the central theme of the play. This is the conflict between the inexorable demands of justice and the recognition of the possibility of moral justification for an illegal act. This is the problem of Captain Vere (André Morell) who finds himself in disagreement with the other members of the drumhead court martial. The Captain must uphold naval discipline as laid down in Admiralty Orders; he dare not show weakness in view of recent Fleet mutinies. He puts his duty, as he sees it, before his feelings as a human being.

There are several passages of poetic feeling, and the scenes on board a ship of the line in the days of sail are cleverly contrived.

Agarol is a useful laxative for administration when functional constipation occurs at almost any age or illness. It restores and maintains normal bowel function by lubricating the intestinal contents, stimulating peristalsis and absorbing moisture to increase bulk. Agarol is suitable for both adults and children and is pleasant to take.
It is gentle yet effective in action and helps to re-educate the intestine to normal function; moreover, leakage does not occur. Agarol is of particular value where constipation is complicated by haemorrhoids.

haemorrhoids

Anusol Haemorrhoidal Suppositories are indicated for the alleviation of itching, bleeding, general discomfort and pain associated with haemorrhoids. They are easy to insert and melt almost immediately; their therapeutic effect, therefore, occurs in a few minutes. These haemorrhoidal suppositories are extremely beneficial during pregnancy and in the puerperium.
Anusol Ointment is made to a formula very similar to that of the suppositories and is indicated for patients suffering from perineal eczema or pruritus ani.

The 38th annual general meeting of the Leicester Branch took place at the Leicester Royal Infirmary on March 8. Miss M. F. Carpenter, director in the Education Department, Royal College of Nursing, was guest speaker. Miss M. McAlister was elected president and Miss I. W. Blackwell, Miss M. Baldwin and Miss E. M. Tarratt were elected vice-presidents in recognition of their services to the Branch. Miss A. Ratcliffe, senior superintendent, Leicester Home Nursing Service, was elected chairman and Mrs. E. Burr, matron, Fielding Johnson Hospital, vice-chairman.

St. Albans Branch

The new hon. secretary of the St. Albans Branch is Miss A. Featherstone, 2, Old House Road, Hemel Hempstead, Herts.

Jersey Branch

The ninth annual general meeting of Jersey Branch was held at the General Hospital on February 24. Miss M. E. Piper, matron, and chairman of the Branch, presided and the chair was taken by the president, Lt. Col. Stewart. Miss E. A. Voisin, secretary, presented the annual report, and the financial statement was given by Mrs. G. M. Moore, treasurer.

Miss Voisin, on behalf of members, congratulated Miss Piper on being awarded the M.B.E. in the New Year Honours List. Events during a successful year, said Miss Voisin, had included lectures by prominent medical men, the celebration of Florence Nightingale's birthday in the hospital chapel, and a visit from Miss Thyer, eastern area organizer. Membership had risen during the year and there were now 71 members.

Col. Stewart said that the activities of the Jersey Branch compared very favourably with those of Branches on the mainland. This was due, he said, to the lively and active interest of Miss Piper and the unusual abilities of the committee. Mr. E. H. Le Brocq, Chief of Police of Jersey, gave a most interesting account of the police services of the island. Col. Stewart expressed his willingness to remain in office for another year. Miss Piper, Miss Voisin and Mrs. Moore were re-elected chairman, secretary and treasurer, respectively, and the committee were also unanimously re-elected.

Letters to the Editor

Health Visiting—a Warning

MADAM.—It is with growing concern that I ask 'What is happening to health visiting?' May I remind all those concerned with this service that the fundamental work of the health visitor is the promotion and maintenance of good health, and all her work and teaching is to this end. It would appear that in many areas the health visitor is so much concerned with special work that it is impossible to do the solid practical work with families, such as her predecessors did so successfully.

Although I would agree that a certain amount of selective visiting is necessary, the danger now appears to be that only abnormal families are selected for visiting, which means, that the health visitor really is engaged in curative work. Only by the routine visiting of normal families can the health visitor hope to maintain good health and prevent family breakdown. To neglect helping them until problems occur, then to select them because of the problem, is a complete misconception of the health visitor's function.

Prevention of home accidents (increased by 14 per cent.) and prevention of mental ill-health and problem families, to mention some of the more pressing problems, can best be done by good parentcraft teaching in schools, clinics, and more particularly in the homes, by teaching in simple terms the fundamental needs for good physical, mental and social health. One of the chief reasons why diphtheria immunization figures are not satisfactory and fatal home accidents are at a disgraceful level is partly because the health visitor is not doing enough of the routine work she is trained for. Unless I am much mistaken, we shall soon be hearing again of more children entering hospital with diseases due to nutritional deficiency, due to the same reason.

I am well aware of the acute shortage of health visitors in many areas and that this will not be overcome until remuneration is adequate for the responsibility of their work, but shortage cannot be accepted as any excuse for the present mis-use of many health visitors.

ROSEMARY HALE.

Four Sets of Neighbours

MADAM.—May I point out a small, but, I think, important slip (or printers' error) in Miss Barnes' admirable account of the conference at St. Andrews in last week's issue of the Nursing Times? In my introductory address I suggested as the fourth set of neighbours "people who worked with us on boards and committees", not "people who work for us".

H. M. BLAIR-FISH.

Influenza Symptoms

MADAM.—While I hesitate to doubt the findings of the Department of Medicine, University of Sheffield, in their research into influenza, there is one particular point in your photographic feature which I feel cannot be allowed to pass unchallenged.

Within my experience of several years in industrial medical work and as a victim of influenza on occasion, respiratory symptoms including coryza are not the most usual features of influenza; I am personally of the opinion that when they occur they are in fact either superimposed infections or complications of the disease.

In occupational health work we have perhaps better opportunity than most nurses to study these diseases, especially at their onset, when a tentative diagnosis must be made, but also at every other stage.

I wonder if others in this field have found, as I have, that respiratory symptoms are the exception rather than the rule?

Florence Nightingale House

MADAM.—May I through your journal inform your readers that there is a vacancy* for an assistant warden at this house, which is a memorial to Florence Nightingale, under the auspices of the Florence Nightingale National Memorial Committee of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. It is a residence for 44 nurses from all over the world doing post-certificate study in various nursing fields. Many of them are leading nurses in their own countries; here they not only study together but make lasting friendships. The warden is a trainee of St. Thomas' Hospital, London, and is responsible for the care and maintenance of the house and the general well-being of the students, and she has created a happy atmosphere. The assistant warden also comes in close touch with the students and relieves the warden when she is off duty—but her primary work is in charge of the catering and housekeeping (there are two cooks).

When the students are away for practical work and holidays, guests are received for short periods—many of these are from overseas. There is a very pleasant garden attached to the house.

The work is most interesting and well worthwhile and I do hope anyone with necessary experience in catering, who is interested in people and international relationships, will write to me for further particulars.

DOROTHY A. LANE,
Hon. Secretary, House Committee,
Florence Nightingale House.

Codis is so much better...

...when a codeine compound tablet is necessary because all the advantages of "Disprin", which you know so well, have been embodied in the "Codis" tablet. The aspirin in Codis is in the form of soluble aspirin as in Disprin. This means that there is far less likelihood of stomach upset. The tablet disperses promptly in water, making it easier to administer, and prompt relief is ensured.

Codis is recommended for all those conditions in which a codeine compound tablet is indicated.

made by Deosan Ltd., and they are concerned to demonstrate food hygiene promoted by means of their various chemical sterilizer preparations for washing up and for cleaning equipment. It is pointed out that detergents alone do not kill germs, but it is demonstrated that a suitable chemical sterilizer can be mixed with the day's supply of liquid detergent. A panel of bacteriologists and sanitary authorities answered questions in a 'brains trust' following the showing of the film. Among points raised was that of sterilization by steam, and this was said to be effective provided the correct procedures were carried out; but there was the risk that pressure or temperature might be inadequate.

CENTRAL MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL VEGETABLE ROOM

THE Central Middlesex Hospital has set a precedent in the building of the central vegetable preparation room to supply the four kitchens of the hospital. The new unit was formally opened on March 2 by Mr. Maurice Orbach, M.P., chairman of the hospital management committee.

The building is equidistant from the four kitchens and cost £2,374, including the demolition of the original building. The interior is bright and spacious with the floor and lower half of the walls cream tiled; the rest of the walls and ceiling are painted yellow contrasting with the red-painted window-frames. There is strip lighting, and a thermostatically controlled electric convector-type heater.

The bulk supplies of vegetables are brought in at the western end of the building to the two bays for root and other vegetables. In the preparation room itself, the sinks and tables have been carefully positioned to enable a swift and continuous flow of preparation and filling into the covered carriers which are despatched from the eastern end. There is also a small yard for refuse collection, and adjoining toilet accommodation.

The project was designed to promote hygienic food preparation, to economize in labour, to eliminate, as far as possible, unnecessary handling of bulk vegetables and to improve the environment of the workers. Certainly the kitchen staff who were present at the opening seemed very pleased with their new unit.

TRAINING HOSPITAL DOMESTIC STAFF

KING Edward's Hospital Fund for London is continuing to arrange short refresher courses for those responsible for the recruitment, training, management and welfare of domestic staff in hospitals, as recommended in a report prepared in 1946 at the request of the Ministry of Labour and National Service. There has been an appreciative response on the part of the hospitals to this opportunity and the large numbers of applications received for these courses give clear evidence of the importance now attached to the right training of hospital domestic staff.

An informal 'at home' was held on March 21 at the School of Hospital Catering, St. Pancras Way, London, when a group of senior members of hospital staffs in the London area who had been seconded for a week's refresher course at the School of Catering entertained a number of visitors to tea, among whom were the matrons of their own hospitals with other administrative officers and lecturers to the course. About three months after each course a follow-up conference is arranged to discuss the progress made and difficulties not yet resolved.

At the Cinema

The Court Jester

Here again with all his charm and gaiety is Danny Kaye, as court jester to the king of England (exact period unspecified). It is all quite absurd and very good entertainment. Starring also Glynis Johns, Basil Rathbone and Cecil Parker.

The Man who Never Was

A very excellent film of Naval Intelligence and the plan conceived to delude the enemy as to where the Allies were going to invade Europe. It is a real thriller, superbly acted.

Good Morning Miss Dove

An elderly school teacher inculcates discipline in the children in her charge. This virtue she has to use herself when she is suddenly stricken and taken to hospital for an operation. Jennifer Jones is Miss Dove, and she acts supremely well.

At the Theatre

CRANKS (St. Martin's)

You need to be quick of eye, mind and wit to appreciate everything in this sophisticated revue, so amusingly and cleverly presented by Hugh Bryant, Annie Ross, Anthony Newley and Gilbert Vernon. They sing, they dance, they mime, they talk at a terrific rate; they seem to use every muscle and bone, they move props and change items of costume—all against a surrealist setting which is perfect for such titles as Bats, Paranoia, All Tied up, Passacaglia. It does not really matter that one does not know the titles till the curtain goes up, for much is literal, more is Goon-like, it all coheres in an odd kind of way and makes a fascinating evening.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA (Old Vic)

This most entertaining, at times hilarious production, makes sense of a play which is not easily understood from reading the text. The programme tactfully reminds us that it is the seventh year of the siege of Troy by the Greeks to avenge the theft of Helen, wife of Menelaus, by Paris, son of the Trojan king Priam, and Troilus (John Neville) is lovesick for the charming if wanton Cressida (Rosemary Harris).

Tyrone Guthrie has imaginatively experimented with the costumes and where one might expect authentic Grecian and Trojan uniforms, one sees instead shades of Prussian generals, Life Guards and Kitcheners. They are all fed up with the war; the Trojans are even debating whether to send Helen packing; the Greek generals are at odds. They are all so human—the delightfully Edwardian Pandarus (Paul Rogers), Gaiety-girl Helen (Wendy Hiller), the bombastic Ajax, the old bore Nestor, Achilles, great in renown but not in truce, dyspeptic Menelaus, the Drake-like Ulysses—and above them all shines the integrity and valour of Hector (Jack Gwillim).

And if there is frequent cause for laughter there is always Thersites (Clifford Williams), a kind of Strube's little man, to press home in forceful language the folly of war, the truth about heroes and wantons. A moving little soliloquy by Pandarus ends a play in which the poetry may at times be subordinated to humour—but what fun it all is.

THE GOOD SAILOR (Lyric, Hammersmith)

A dramatization by Louis O. Coxe and Robert Chapman of Herman Melville's novel, Billy Budd, this is a tale of the bad old days, with all the horrors and hardships of life in the King's Navy—depicted in no mealy-mouthed fashion by an effective cast. Ruffians, almost all, their lives aboard H.M.S. Indomitable are dominated by fear of the Master-at-Arms, Claggart, played by Leo McKern who succeeds admirably in giving an impression of smooth, satanic cruelty to this unpleasant character. In contrast to the varied villainy of the rest of the crew, the hero, Billy Budd (Philip Bond), is a simple, good-hearted orphan boy, who, by stabbing Claggart to death under the greatest provocation, provides the central theme of the play. This is the conflict between the inexorable demands of justice and the recognition of the possibility of moral justification for an illegal act. This is the problem of Captain Vere (André Morell) who finds himself in disagreement with the other members of the drumhead court martial. The Captain must uphold naval discipline as laid down in Admiralty Orders; he dare not show weakness in view of recent Fleet mutinies. He puts his duty, as he sees it, before his feelings as a human being.

There are several passages of poetic feeling, and the scenes on board a ship of the line in the days of sail are cleverly contrived.

The ninth annual general meeting of Jersey Branch was held at the General Hospital on February 24. Miss M. E. Piper, matron, and chairman of the Branch, presided and the chair was taken by the president, Lt. Col. Stewart. Miss E. A. Voisin, secretary, presented the annual report, and the financial statement was given by Mrs. G. M. Moore, treasurer.

Miss Voisin, on behalf of members, congratulated Miss Piper on being awarded the M.B.E. in the New Year Honours List. Events during a successful year, said Miss Voisin, had included lectures by prominent medical men, the celebration of Florence Nightingale's birthday in the hospital chapel, and a visit from Miss Thyer, eastern area organizer. Membership had risen during the year and there were now 71 members.

Col. Stewart said that the activities of the Jersey Branch compared very favourably with those of Branches on the mainland. This was due, he said, to the lively and active interest of Miss Piper and the unusual abilities of the committee. Mr. E. H. Le Brocq, Chief of Police of Jersey, gave a most interesting account of the police services of the island. Col. Stewart expressed his willingness to remain in office for another year. Miss Piper, Miss Voisin and Mrs. Moore were re-elected chairman, secretary and treasurer, respectively, and the committee were also unanimously re-elected.
